President-elect George Bush met this week with college presidents from all over the country to get their views on education. Absent from the group were any of the Five College presidents, who held their own meeting before Thanksgiving, called "An Educational Agenda For the Next Administration." But, Bush did select present Education Secretary Lauro F. Cavazos to continue in his position, as Chancellor Duffey recommended.

A question for the philosophy department: If a C-5A screams overhead and no one from Amherst hears it, does it make any noise?

People in this town are too upset about the C-5A's from Westover Air Force Base. I live in Amherst and I've never been annoyed by a C-5A. Where I live the train is louder, and after a week, you don't notice that either.

Suppose we succeed in banning C-5A's from flying over Amherst. Very good. They're still going to be flying somewhere. 'Not in my backyard' is translated to 'Not in my airspace.'

Time to review this semester's winner of most letters to the editor. The semester: surprise, it's Alan Ditmore, who wrote a letter about a POW-MIA flag he didn't like. Thirteen people responded to Ditmore, the largest response to a submission in three semesters. Runners-up are Pam McCarthy with 11, and Rusty Denton with 10. Gone from the list is last semester's winner, Stuart Gottlieb, who only receieved two letters this fall.

By the way, letters to the editor were way down from last semester when Gottlieb got 24 and Denton 22. What's up folks, cat got your typewriter?

Dickinson was 'no coward soul'

"The soul selects her own society — then — shuts the door." Emily Dickinson, born in Amherst on December 10, 1830, chose the society of self.

It is often society's inability to understand Dickinson's lifestyle, which terms her a "madwoman." Her etheral need for thought, and what University of Massachusetts Professor David Porter understands as a "menacing ascendance of consciousness," contributed to Dickinson's withdrawal. Her reclusive lifestyle was as unconventional as her poetry. This poetry was the eruption of her hightly involved thought; it erupted from the depths of introspection — powerful, intense, but very controlled. Who would have thought Amherst housed such a fine mystery as this?

Although after age 23 Dickinson did not see many visitors, she maintained contact with a wide variety of correspondents. Letters became her sound interaction with society as she stated in 1869: "A letter always feels to me like immortality because it is the mind alone without corporeal friend."

Dickinson was a precursor to the modern period of literature, while evolving from 19th century romanticism. Her steadfast pursuit of the "unknown" became an obsession — her poetry dealing with the abstractions of self, life, death, and immortality collectively represent the majority of her canon (1775 poems). "Life is the finest secret" wrote Dickinson in 1870, a secret which captured her attention and motivated her linguistically to explore the intangible.

Dickinson was "Called Back" on May 15 in 1886. Perhaps on this day she resolved her conflict of curiosity. At her funeral Dickinson was pronounced "No coward soul," and justly so; she sought the stranger within herself, a stranger who could suffice for the external world, and a stranger who could sustain a highly self-conscious experience of life.

JFK deserves praise, not criticism

In Rusty Denton's article ('Kennedy: The truth behind the man, the myth, and the legend," Dec. 5) many of Denton's 'truths' are not only contracdicting, but also misleading.

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was a man who cared deeply in public service and the advancement of America. In his short tenure as President, JFK was able to accomplish many positive progrmas, that far outweigh his faults.

By developing the Peace corps, he inspired millions of Americans to help the world's underprivileged. While much fo the nation had a feeling of ambivalence towards civil rights, Kennedy fervently spoke in favor of civil rights.

Moreover, it was not Kennedy that ordered the assassination of Diem. Rather, it was Henry Cabot Lodge, the Ambassador to South Vietnam, who urged Vietnamese Generals to assasinate Diem.

Of couse Kennedy was disheartened with the turn of events at the Bay of Pigs, but he was not the initiator. It was the Dulles brothers from the Eisenhower Administration who pressured Kennedy into following through with the invasion.

There was tremendous pressure from the Republicans for Kennedy to be "Tough on Communism." It is important to understand that in that time period it was widely accepted that America should be "Tough on Communism," whether you were a Democrat or a Republican. To compare the economic situration of the 60's to that of the 80's is ludicrous. First, Kennedy could get away with spending and borrowing more money because we still had a strong reserve of cash. It has only been since the 70's that people have been concerned about the national deficit. We didn't have one when Kennedy was in office. We weren't in economic competition with Japan or Europe yet and the gold standard was still high, so we could afford to spend more. To compare J.F.K. to Reagan with respect to spending is unfounded. Reagan has accumulated a national deficit more than the deficits of Washington to Carter combined.

Finally, and least important, it was Franklin Rosevelt, not Kennedy who initiated the practice of taping Oval Office conversations.

J.F.K. was a president who inspired thousands and I think it's important to remember him because of what the did for this country. Through his actions, he enthralled the American public by reaffirming their own beliefs.

WMUA hosts five bands in Bluewall

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Today is WMUA Day, and that means that YOU should get yourself down to the Blue Wall Cafe for the most mind-blowing concert you'll see any time this year.

The event kicks off at 6:30 p.m. with jazz double-bass maestro, Avery Sharpe and his trio, whose eclectic mix of styles will be followed by the Latin-infused sounds of Orchestra de Chevere.

Later on in the evening the focus turns to rock, with the much-improved Amherst band, the Lonely Moans whose new 45, "Rockin' Nerd," on the very excellent Amphetamine Reptile record label, is currently riding high on WMUA's playlist.

Then things really begin to hot up when New York groovy grungemeisters, the Reverb MFs take to the stage for some serious audience mind reprogramming, and finally, just when you think that your brain cells have had enough pummeling, the utterly fearsome Bullet Lavolta will crack open your cranium with their nuclear pile-driver punk energy.

Okay, I know what you're going to say: "I've never heard of any of these bands. Why should I go?"

Well, for a start with tickets priced at $2 if you're a Five College student and $4 if you're not, you won't have a cheaper night out this year, and with a line-up as strong and as varied as this one, what have you got to lose?

Secondly, the money you spend will go to WMUA, which ultimately means that it comes back to you in the form of their excellent and diverse programming. Put it this way, if you like the show and want to hear more of the music, you won't find it on any other station.

WMUA needs your support. Between this event and the on-going Telethon, the station is hoping to raise $25,000, making up one quarter of its budget for the next fiscal year. Drastic cuts in state education funding mean that the University is itself having to make cut-backs which affect registered student organizations such as WMUA. But you can help, both by going to the WMUA Day concert and by responding to the Telethon. Who knows what could happen if every UMass student pledged $2 to their very own radio station . . . See ya tonight!

Max Roach and Jazz All Stars hit FAC Concert Hall Saturday

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Once again the Jazz All Stars are playing at the University of Massachusetts and, once again, drummer Max Roach has found a whole new group of friends to play with.

Tomorrow evening, Roach will hit the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall with Larry Ridley and the Jazz Legacy Ensemble. As usual the proceeds will benefit the Fletcher Henderson Memorial Scholarship, which is presented annually to a student in the University's Afro-American Music and Jazz Program.

In previous All Stars shows, Roach has appeared with jazz greats like Ray Brown, Stan Turrentine and Hank Jones. This is the one time each year UMass students can see Roach perform in all his eclectic glory.

Roach, 64, is a part-time professor of music at the University. He has worked with many of the biggest names in jazz, among them, Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk, Bud Powell and Benny Carter. Among his peers, he is considered one of the most influential and talented drummers alive.

Throughout his career, Roach has made hundreds of recordings with musicians from all parts of the musical spectrum: the Boston Pops, Japan's Koto Drummers, hip-hop artist Fab Five Freddie and crossover jazz-classical artists Kronos Quartet are among the acts he has worked with. The percussion ensemble M'Boom, which has been performing off and on for the last two decades, was Roach's brainchild.

New York's Jazz Legacy Ensemble consists of Larry Ridley on bass, Virgil Jones on trumpet, Junior Cook on tenor sax, Larry McClellan on trombone, Charlie Persip on drums, Ed Stoute on piano and Jann Parker on vocals.

Those of you who don't have tickets just might be able to get them for $9, $8 and $7 if you're a general public. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. The show starts at 8 p.m.

Take two Phishing trips this weekend

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

Every once in awhile, a band comes along that just cries out to be noticed. In fact, there are times when it becomes clear that a group is destined for success. Burlington Vermont, a little known but very active bastion of musical activity, is home to the band Phish; a rock quartet that can only be described as amazing.

Drawing compositional influence from Frank Zappa, emulating the "straight from the heart" feel of the Allman Brothers and posessing the power of Led Zeppelin, Phish (led by guitarist/vocalist/songwriter Trey Anastasio) have arrived at a unique style all their own, and their relentless schedule of touring, practicing, and recording illustrates their hunger for recognition, both commercial and musical.

Anastasio began writing "songs" when he was in the fourth grade. Amazingly, two of his primitive arrangements (composed at the ripe old age of 12) have stood the test of time, and both "Golgi Apparatus" and "Makisupa Policeman" remain staples of the band's live show.

Anastasio began playing guitar in the 11th grade, and now, seven years later, in spite of his accomplished fretboard skills, he continues to write on piano.

"For the song Foam I wrote 14 pages of music. I wrote out everyone's parts, went over what I wanted for a drum part with John, and then we just put it together," he said. "I don't really play the piano well, I just write on it. The better I get at writing, the easier and easier everything is."

The Phish formula is tough to pinpoint. At their own admission, the band is exploring jazz styles more intensely; improvising, playing over unorthodox chord changes and more or less just stretching themselves out. However, while songs like "The Lizards" and the instrumental "David Bowie" hint at some possible fusion influences, chances are you won't find many Al DiMeola or John McLaughlin discs in Anastasio's collection.

"Led Zeppelin . . . "

About as straightforward an answer as you could hope for when asking the question: "What band(s) made you want to pick up the guitar?" The Page influence, far reaching in all aspects of rock guitar, is evident but certainly not overbearing in the Phish sound; and while at times Anastasio pulls off the guitar heroics, it's drummer John Phishman's hard hitting technique that is so reminiscent of the Zeppelin powerhouse approach.

Phish are a band that have taken their influences to an expansive limit. Even their carefully selected covers credit their musicianship. From Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Peaches en Regalia," Phish give a nod to the original artist, and take the piece to new heights.

Phish is an institution in the Burlington club scene, and they've toured as far as Colorado. Mainatining a grueling six hour a day practice schedule, the band is preparing for the release of their first album, a two disc effort.

"We're gonna record the album ourselves, then look into all the label stuff," Anastasio said. "We'll get the master tapes, and then shop them around. We're going for what we want to do . . . a lot of people have said we shouldn't make it a double album, for commercial reasons."

"We can't decide which are our best songs," he continued, "and our songs are like 14 minutes long. We're going to record what we think is good, and if people don't like it . . . fuck it."

Perhaps Phish won't get the same amount of airplay they would if they were from say . . . Athens, Georgia, but people will like them. People do like them.

"Our audience is great. People come to the shows, and they request our originals. That's just . . . great," he said.

Anastasio and the rest of Phish (Page McConnell/piano, Mike Gordon/bass and John Phishman/drums) come to the Valley this weekend. Sheehans in Northampton is the host for tonight's show, and tomorrow night the band will be at the Red Barn at Hampshire College. Get out and do some Phishing.

Congressmen schooled about important issue

CAMBRIDGE, (AP) – A special class of freshmen enters Harvard this week; newly elected congressmen who will be schooled by experts on such thorny political issues as the national economy, AIDS and foreign intelligence.

The five-day series of private seminars beginning Thursday at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government has been a biannual fixture since 1972, said school spokesman Steve Singer.

"Each year we've been getting higher percentage of the new members attending and it's become a very good way for the members of the new congressional class to get to know eachother," Singer said.

Topics covered in this year's session include a lecture on criminal justice by US Attorney General Richard Thornburgh, a breifing on education by Education Secretary Lauaro Cavasos and a class on the federal budget process led by Alice Rivlin, former director of the Congressinal Budget Office.

Former US Rep William Ratchford, a Connecticut Democrat, said the Harvard orientation was the most useful thing he did in the days after the was first elected in 1978.

It was an opportunity to hear from the experts on issues in depth in a closed-door situation where you cold ask the most basic question without feeling silly about it," said Rachford, who was defeated in 1984 and now is a lawyer in Washington.

Ratchford co-chaired the 1982 session and said the secondary benefit is that it offers an academic oasis way form the hustle of post-election politics and gives new congressmen a chance to meet.

"It was away from the hurlyburly of Washington," he said.

"This is a complete break away ... where you can sit and listen and think."

The orientation is co-sponsored by the House Administraton Committee. The etiquette of congressional life, how to select a staff and conduct day-to-day business is handled in a Washington seminar, organizers said. The Harvard excursion focuses on academics.

The orientaton program is paid for and by the House Administratn Committee and private foundation grants.

This year, five members of the British Parliament will join the class, Singer said.

He said 27 congressmen have registered for the rigorous linup of seminars.

Third body found, search on

NEW BEDFORD (AP) – The third woman identified yesterday among five murdered bodies found in southeastern Massachusetts was a drug addict with ties to a seedy section of this fishing port, according to the victim's mother.

As the search for a killer and for more bodies continued, investigators identified Debra Medeiros, 30, of Fall River, as the first of five female bodies found between July and December in a wooded roadside area in the towns of Dartmouth and Freetown.

Medeiros is believed to have died of strangulation, according to Thomas Gibney, a spokesman for Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina. She was reported missing by her family in Fall River on May 27. Her partially clad body was found July 3.

British add new words to language in famous Register of New Words

LONDON (AP) — Previous euphemisms for lying are now, to use the outdated word, inoperative. In the latest British lingo, to withold the truth is to be "economical."

"Economical" has been enshrined in the Longman Register of New Wor ds, among 1,200 words and phrases including "plonker," "loadsamoney," "bonk journalism" and "yah."

All, according to Longman's editor, John Ayto, have insinuated themselves into the language of Chaucer, Shakespeare and Dickens since 1986.

"Economical" owes its new meaning to court cases involving "Spycatcher," the expose by former intelligence official Peter Wright that the government tryed to supress.

In a court case in Australia over "Spycatcher," former British civil service head sir Robert Armstrong admitted he had previously been "econimical with the truth."

Economical" thus has come to be euphemism for "deliberately withholding something form public knowledge," the Register said.

"Sexy" has been tamed, now meaning attractive, enjoyable or trendy, the Register said, but the language has found new ways to talk about the birds and the bees.

The press' infatuation with sex has produced the term "bonk journalism," defined in the Register as "journalism concerned with obtaining and printing accounts of the supposed sexual activities of well known people."

"Plonker," the insult which Del Boy constantly hurls at his younger brother in the British Boradcasting Corp. TV sitcom "Only Fools and Horses," has established itslef as a synonym for a dim-witted and ineffectual person.

The Register regretfully chonicled a growing tendency, blamed on the former 13 colonies, to use nouns as verbs: "to nuke," a usage which was denounced as an "alarmingly cozy" euphemism for starting World War III; "to stiff," or fail in commercial venture, and "to gender" or stereotypically associated something with men or women.

Several new words and phrases - the derogatory "dependency culture" and "learned helplessness" along with the approving "can do" - are owed to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

She also is credited with reviving a term from her native Lincolnshire: "frit," meaning someone who is frightened.

One of her wealthy supporters in the financial world is now said to be "well-wedged," a real "loadsamoney."

feels she can do even better. "It's tough to run by herself, so this will be good for her," said LaFreniere. The 400 meter race will be interesting, as this event has yet to solidify for LaFreniere. Freshman Lee Ann Ambrose is the defending New England champ in the quarter-mile (56.1), but she is coming off a pre-season injury.

LaFreniere will have Cathy Crocker, Michelle St. Laurent, and Sonja Vaughan in the 800. "Michelle and Cathy are coming off an excellent cross-country background, but I think it's tough going from 5000 to 800 meters. They've both got a lot of endurance, but they haven't been exposed to a lot of short, quick runs," said LaFreniere, who also coaches women's cross-country.

Peers, Christine Hopkins, and Wendy Lofgren will be in the 3000, where the top 20 runners will qualify for the finals. Both the mile and two-mile relay teams appear solid. The 4x440 will include Marshall, Crocker, Vaughan, and Ambrose, and the 4x880 will consist of LaVallee, St. Laurent, Smith, and Hill. The throwers will be competing for the first time this season and LaFreniere will be anxious to see them. "They have been working with Jim (Giroux) since September, and this will be their first time to compete. They have worked on technique all fall," said LaFreniere. In addition, Giroux, a new assistant to the staff, has added hitting the weights in the thrower's training program. "That I think is a big step for all our throwing events," LaFreniere said.

In addition to the shot put, sophomore Simone Marisseau will be throwing the 20-pound weight for the first time. Helen Baldouras and Diane Ozzolak will also be heaving the shot.

LaFreniere said, "We're now looking for throwers because we have a person (Giroux) to spend some time with them. I'm really looking forward to seeing them."

The Harvard meet will be quite a test for the Minutewomen and they'll certainly be facing some top-notch competition, as the invitational is open to almost anybody who wishes to compete. In past years, top New England track schools and clubs have entered, and even Olympians have competed. LaFreniere said, "The kids are going to be exposed to some hc competition."

This all goes back to Hewelt's main goal of getting the team to play consistently for an entire game.

"Forty minutes," Hewelt said. "We've got to keep up the intensity."

So far, they've managed to get by despite their faults. If Hewelt ever succeeds in her goal, who knows what the Minutewomen could achieve.

Hoop-la: Some aftershocks from Wednesday's win: With her spectacular, do-it-all 32-point performance, senior co-captain Christel Zullo has taken over the team lead in scoring with 66 points, for a 16.5 average. The 32 points, which included 21 in the second half, topped her previous high of 19 which came in her freshman year against Vermont . . . UMass had never beaten Holy Cross, losing the previous four meetings.

For the third straight game, UMass used just seven players. Senior co-captain Beth Wilbor played all 40 minutes for the second consecutive game.

Hoop teams set for a day at the Cage

Men to challenge Northeastern at 7

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

If someone was to pick two players that would lead the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team at the beginning of the season, they might name two of the seniors. Or they might name two of the tallest players on this height-deprived team.

Probably the last two people to be named would be the freshmen. Yet those are the ones who have done the job so far.

First-year Minutemen Anton Brown and Jimmy McCoy have been steady, and each has been a hero at some point during the first four games of the season, while UMass has gone 2-2.

Tomorrow at 7 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage, the Minutemen will play host to Northeastern University, and if earlier games are any indication, Brown and McCoy are the players to watch.

McCoy scored 19 points in a losing effort against Rutgers and is the second leading scorer on the team, averaging 14 points per game.

And two nights ago, Brown hit a shot at the buzzer to give UMass a 73-72 victory over the University of New Hampshire.

"Anton has been doing a great job and he's far ahead of where we thought he'd be," UMass coach John Calipari said. "But it's early in the year and he still has a long way to go."

Brown's heroics capped off a game in which UMass squandered a 12-point second-half lead against the Wildcats.

"New Hampshire has been a team that has given UMass trouble," Calipari said. "You're not going into friendly confines when you play there. I'm just happy we won."

But although Brown hit the winning shot Wednesday, Calipari isn't overly impressed yet.

"It's early in the year and [Brown] still has a long way to go," Calipari said. "He still makes freshman mistakes, he just doesn't make as many as Jimmy."

But any contribution from the two freshmen has been appreciated, considering the slow start of seniors David Brown and Duane Chase.

David Brown, the captain, broke out against New Hampshire, though, and finished as the game's high scorer with 22 points.

David Brown (center) hopes to lead the Minutemen to victory over Northeastern tomorrow night.

He leads the team in scoring with an average of 16.3 points per game, and is also the top rebounder.

"David has been better offensively, but he still needs to improve on defense," Calipari said.

And Chase got into foul trouble against New Hampshire and only played about nine minutes.

Northeastern's leading scorer, Ron Lacy (16.3 ppg), has a hip injury and is not expected to play.

The other leading scorers for the Huskies are senior forward Derrick Lewis (12.0) and sophomore forward Keith Carney, who averages 10.6 points and 8.6 rebounds per game.

Northeastern, 3-2, pulled off an 86-82 upset of the University of Rhode Island earlier this week.

"They beat Rhode Island, and they beat Fairfield at Fairfield," Calipari said. "They're a good team. This is like a league game for us. And the good thing is we'll be back in front of the students. They kept us in the BU game [which Boston University won, 78-76], and I think they can have an effect against Northeastern."

The Minutemen will try to give them something to cheer about besides the play of Anton Brown and Jimmy McCoy.

4-0 Minutewomen to play UNH at 2

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

There is no time to celebrate Wednesday's night big win over Holy Cross. The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will get right back into action tomorrow, hosting the University of New Hampshire at the Curry Hicks Cage at 2 p.m.

And the Minutewomen can't get caught riding the laurels of their victory over the Crusaders.

"We can't have a letdown, because UNH is a tough team. They're going to give us a game," UMass coach Kathy Hewelt said.

The Wildcats gave UMass a contest last year as well, dumping the Minutewomen in overtime, 69-63 in Durham, N.H.

And the star attraction from last year's game, and the key player on this year's team, is senior center Kris Kinney. In that win last year, Kinney scored 29 points, including all 12 of her team's points in the extra period.

"Their whole offense centers around her. She can score," Hewelt said. "We have to keep the ball away from her. She's a player."

Beyond Kinney, there are question marks. The other four 'Cats are all first-year starters, but Hewelt says that the Minutewomen can't concentrate on just Kinney.

"We do that and someone else can have an All-American game," Hewelt said.

UMass can be happy with the perfect 4-0 start, but it still knows that there is a lot of room for improvement.

"We're happy with the win (against Holy Cross), but we're not satisfied with the way we played," Hewelt said.

One of the glaring points was near the middle of the second half. UMass had been absolutely decimating the Crusaders, leading by 21 at one point. But suddenly it began to slip away.

"We got way too protective. We were trying so hard not to make mistakes that we were making them every time we had the ball," Hewelt said. "We've just got to play our game."

It was almost a case of deja vu for Hewelt. In the previous game at Hartford, UMass blew out to a large second half lead, only to quickly lose control before pulling it out in the end.

Indoor track looks to run away with victories at Harvard meet

• Second meet for men. . .

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team will participate in its second meet of the season tomorrow at Harvard.

More than 40 schools or clubs will compete in the open competition.

Schools expected to attend include the University of Maryland, Manhattan College, Fordham, St. John's, Rutgers, Boston College, Northeastern, St. Joseph's of Philadelphia, and the University of Connecticut.

"It's a very popular meet," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "The post-graduates insure quality competition and the Harvard track is one of the top 2 or 3 in the country."

After last week's non-scoring meet, O'Brien is looking for strong performances from his freshmen tomorrow.

"I'm looking for our freshmen like Steve Brown [400 meters] and Derek Moore [800 meters] to be ready to run as well as everyone else on varsity," O'Brien said.

O'Brien will also keep a watchful eye on sophomore Mike Gray (60-yard dash).

"I think Mike will pick up his time," said O'Brien. "He usually responds to the big meets."

The middle distance events will be handled by Herb Hefner (1500 meters), Tommy Degnan (5000 meters) and Art Smith (3000). Each has experience and will be counted on by O'Brien to produce during the season.

"I think our track kids [the ones who did not participate in the cross country season] will improve a great deal," O'Brien said. "You usually improve the most from meet No. 1 to meet No. 2. You're physically in shape, but mentally you're a little rusty."

• . . .and women tomorrow

By RIC SETO
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts' women's indoor track team will compete tomorrow in its last meet before winter break, as it travels to Cambridge for the Harvard Invitational.

Last weekend, UMass dominated the field at the Smith Invitational against Division III competition, but the Harvard meet will be definitely the opposite end of the spectrum. UMass coach Julie LaFreniere will be bringing 18 athletes to compete in nine events. Eight Minutewomen will be competing in two events. The first event of what is expected to be a very long day is the 5000-meter race. UMass has Kathy Holt, Anna Montouri, and Amy St. Pierre in this race. LaFreniere said Holt, a sophomore, looked great in the Wednesday workout at Amherst College. Holt and Montouri are considered by LaFreniere as her number 1a and 1b runners in this event. "She (Montouri) is one of those runners, the longer the better," LaFreniere said.

Montouri's teammate Precious Hill added, "She's got great endurance. She's totally anaerobic [gets energy from body fat instead of oxygen]." LaFreniere plans to flip-flop her with Kristin Peers to the 3000.

Another strong event for the Minutewomen will be the 1500, with Hill, Shana Smith, and Laura LaVallee running indoor track's equivalent to the mile. Hill and Smith will be running in the seeded heat, while LaVallee will be in the second heat. Hill ran her first sub-5:00 mile at Smith (a 4:39 1500m) and Smith, as a freshman, ran a 4:35 1500. Hill dominated the Smith track but LaFreniere

Minutemen cruise past Northeastern, 79-69

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

With 16:24 remaining in Saturday night's game, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team found itself tied with Northeastern University, having just lost a 12-point lead.

The situation was not a new one. The Minutemen's reaction to it, however, was.

Freshman guard Jimmy McCoy scored 11 points, as the Minutemen went on a 15-3 run to pull back ahead, and eventually beat the Huskies, 79-69.

"I'm so proud of these kids," UMass head coach John Calipari said. "Offensively. . . the poise we showed. We had a chance of caving in and we didn't."

Because they didn't, the Minutemen improved to 3-2 with one game (vs. Lowell Wednesday night) remaining before the end of the semester. Northeastern fell to 3-3.

"This was an emotional win," said UMass captain David Brown, who led all scorers with 21 points. "It gives us confidence."

The game also was the best team effort by UMass so far this season. Aside from David Brown, and McCoy (19 pts.), Anton Brown chipped in 15 points and senior forward Duane Chase came alive, scoring 11 points and grabbing seven rebounds.

"I've been in a slump," Chase said. "I was trying too hard, trying not to mess up. But tonight I felt more relaxed. Coach moved [John] Tate to the high post, and moved me low, where I'm more comfortable."

Tate had four points for UMass, but his main contribution was nine rebounds.

"John Tate has given us a big, big lift," Calipari said. "He's made us a different team."

Women pull out another one, nip UNH, 72-71

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, the University of Massachusetts women's hoop team started an 18-day break before its next game. But according to coach Kathy Hewelt, the team almost jumped the gun.

For the third straight game, the Minutewomen blew out to a sizable lead and then sat back as the other team recovered to make a game of it. And for the third straight game, UMass was able to pull it out in the end, this time going down to the final shot before sealing a 72-71 win over the University of New Hampshire Saturday afternoon at Curry Hicks Cage.

"We almost left a day early," Hewelt said, regarding her team's near-disappearance from the floor in the second half. "But they really believe now that they can pull it out. In the last time out they told me, 'Don't worry coach, we're gonna win,'"

If they did know, they didn't let anyone else in on it.

"I am very, very proud of these kids," Hewelt said. "It was another case of we bent, but didn't break."

As they had in previous wins over the University of Hartford and Holy Cross, the Minutewomen took a lead of at least 10 points into the second half. This time around, they had captured a 13-point edge, leading the Wildcats 40-27 at intermission.

UMass led by as much as 12, at 54-42 with 13:02 to play, but saw the 'Cats claw their way back into it. Unlike the other games, New Hampshire was able to seize the lead, forcing UMass to perform some magic in the end to get their fifth straight win.

Despite finals, students again prepare to fight new fee, tuition increase

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

A tired figure on the fourth floor of the Student Union Building yesterday, Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said she is experiencing deja-vu.

> "I don't think it's a coincidence that these cuts happen when it's hardest to deal with them.
> — GEO spokeswoman Cynthia Kaufman"

The scene is one week before finals. An additional student fee is imminent, a tuition hike possible. Student leaders organize a rally for mid-week on the Student Union steps, but they expect most students will be too entrenched in text books to participate. "It's happening again," Orefice said, confirming fears she voiced last summer when the trustees adopted a $230 undergraduate curriculum fee.

Finals week, asserts Orefice, is no time for a protest.

"I would rather not have a protest against budget cuts than have 10 people show up," she said.

Nonetheless, a group of students will venture to Boston tomorrow to remind the trustees that students "are going to be the only group on campus that will be taxed," if the fee is imposed, Orefice said. "That makes it all the more unfair."

Although UMass administrators and Gordon N. Oakes Jr., the new chairman of the board of trustees, are vocal in opposition to the cuts, a fee hike seems inevitable, and a tutition hike remains a possibility, according to Chancellor Joseph Duffey.

Although official word has yet to come from the Board of Regents of Higher Education, the state will likely ask UMass to trim $5 million, or 3 percent, of its budget for this fiscal year because of revenue shortfalls in the state.

Duffey unveiled contingency plans last week to avert layoffs, including an employee "furlough" program, where faculty and staff would take time off each month without pay. The plan reportedly received sour reviews from both the governor's office and the faculty union on campus.

In addition to the trip to Boston and the rally, students have organized a petition and a postcard drive. The cards, explaining what fee increases will mean to students at UMass, will be sent this week to Gov. Michael Dukakis.

UMass graduate students plan to hold a news conference tomorrow in the Campus Center, detailing how cuts may affect teaching assistant positions next semester. Cynthia Kaufman, spokeswoman for the Graduate Employees Organization, said yesterday that she is suspicious of the timing of the cuts.

"I don't think it's a coincidence that these cuts happen when it's hardest to deal with them," Kaufman said, referring to upcoming finals. She said that when the smoke begins to settle in January, further protests are likely among graduate students.

Orefice noted that there is touch of cooperation among administrators and students this semester — a sense of common ground — in fighting the state's orders. But, she added, "If it takes a crisis to bring us together, then that's not enough."

She said when the trustees adopted the curriculum fee in July, designed to improve undergraduate general education, they set a dangerous precedent by charging students costs traditionally absorbed by the state.

BOG slashes $10K from UPC budget

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

As part of its budget package for fiscal 1989, the Board of Governors voted unanimously Thursday night to slash funding to the Union Program Council by $10,000.

UPC, one of the largest college concert promoters on the East Coast, will now be given $20,000 by the board, down from $30,000 last year.

BOG Treasurer Joe Casali cited a proposed closing of the Fine Arts Center from May, 1989 until February, 1990 as one of the reasons for the decrease in funding to UPC. He said that with the FAC closed, UPC will need less money.

Casali also cited decreases in funding to the board from the Student Activities Trust Fund as a reason for the cut to UPC.

"We're limited in what we can do," Casali said.

Members of UPC who were at the meeting were upset with the decision, but could do little to stop it. The budget proposal passed unanimously, with one abstention.

"That $10,000 is the difference between an average spring concert and a great spring concert," said Steven Shepard, UPC stage manager.

UPC Production Manager Ari Weinstein, who said the council's budget runs at about $150,000, said the money is equal to what two Blue Wall Cafe shows cost to produce, or the cost of the stage for the spring concert near the campus pond.

UPC is required by the BOG to spend money the board gives it in the Campus Center or Student Union, or else the money is not transferred out of BOG accounts.

But, said Weinstein, "We look at that $30,000 as part of our total budget. A $10,000 cut is going to affect our programming campus-wide."

Weinstein said he wasn't sure where the money could be made up. He said UPC might ask area governments for more money. He said he was "99 percent" sure ticket prices would not rise.

First snowfall precipitates mixed reactions

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

No masses of students went caroling this weekend, and as the first snow fell on Amherst Saturday night, some University of Massachusetts students said they were unhappy, and that the only students who were happy were those who knew how to ski.

According to the National Weather Service in Worcester, ½ inch of snow accumulated late Saturday night and early yesterday morning, the first snowfall of more than a trace this winter.

Although some students felt this year's first snow was exceptionally late, the record late snow was in 1923, when the first snow fell on Christmas Eve, according to the weather service.

One meteorologist at the weather service said the relatively late first snow was not uncommon, and that the region "should still expect a heavy snowfall this winter."

Locally, no major accidents caused by the snow were reported at UMass or in the town of Amherst.

"Nothing major occurred," said Sgt. Raymond Babb of the UMass police department.

Officers were sighted late Saturday night and early yesterday morning watching the snow fall from their cars as they drove through campus following the "snow policy," or winter ticketing and towing system, which Babb said has been in effect since Dec. 1.

Sgt. Robert O'Connor of the Amherst Police Department said the town has a similar snow policy that also has been in effect since the first of December.

O'Connor said the system goes into effect after 2 a.m. He said a motor vehicle receives a warning the first time it is found parked on a main road. Ticketing and then towing occur subsequently.

"If we had had a large storm [Saturday], then we would have forgone the warnings and the tickets," O'Connor said. "But last night's accumulation obviously wasn't at that level."

Some UMass students were happy with the storm's accumulation, regardless of their reasons for liking or hating the white stuff.

Andy Epstein, a sophomore SOM major, said he was glad that UMass had its first snow of the winter, and that apparently other students felt the same. "There were a few people yelling in the [Orchard Hill] bowl," he said.

"Snow makes me feel a lot better," he said. "It gives people energy for the final weeks of school."

HIGH DIVE – Steve Mathewson dives into a pile of futons and bean bags outside his Northampton home during the recent snow shower.

Jill Hughes, a junior anthropology major, disagreed, saying instead that the snow makes her have to expend more energy.

"It doesn't make me feel better," she said. "If you ski you're fine, but it takes twice as long to drive anywhere in the snow."

Car problems were also on the mind of Frank Flannery, a senior English major. "I don't like the snow because it's my car's worst enemy," he said.

"I guess the average student likes it, if they don't have a car or if they ski," he said.

Babb said in light of the implementation of the snow policy, "to the best of my knowledge, no more warnings will be handed out on campus."

Babb said students cannot assume the campus will not have more snow this year. "There's still two weeks left in the semester. I don't know what Mother Nature's going to do," he said.

Meredith Sherter, a sophomore SOM major, was one student who hoped Mother Nature would take it easy.

"I rather it didn't snow. . . I wish it were Spring and Fall forever," she said.

Students to solicit donations for earthquake victims

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

A student organization at the University of Massachusetts will ask for contributions today to assist earthquake-ravaged Armenia, where rescuers continue to search for trapped survivors.

The 18-member Armenian Club is also planning a vigil for tomorrow night for victims of the quake, which claimed the lives of 50,000 to 60,000 and injured 6,000 more. The event was originally in response to ethnic violence of the Azerbaijanis, but was changed over the weekend into a combination protest/vigil, according to Roy Chatalbash, the club's president.

In addition to a table on the Campus Center Concourse, the club plans to solicit contributions from Registered Student Organizations, Chatalbash said. His club will put up an immediate $100, he said.

No members of the club have relatives in the devastated sections of Armenia, Chatalbash said, but some have distant relatives in neighboring territories. "We're hopeful that the response will be very good," he said of the fundraiser.

Bob Semonian of Watertown, who is working for the Armenian Earthquake Committee for the Northeast, said assistance from the United States is beginning to flow smoothly – after some bureaucratic obstacles. Semonian said his group is working to get American doctors to Armenia, as well as soliciting major manufactures for clothing.

"The Russians weren't used to an earthquake like this," Semonian said. He added that assisting victims of the quake has brought the two superpowers together: "Who would have thought we would be working this close with the Soviets?"

"Every bit of contribution counts," Semonian said. "This is going to be a long thing. It will be more than a year [of sending assistance]."

Here are some places to send contributions:

The American Red Cross, Hampshire County Chapter, 125 State Street, Northampton, 01060.

Pro-choice activists demonstrate Friday at a pro-life rally outside the Student Union. Ruth Ever, a family planning counselor, spoke at the rally and said the Republican platform is "anti-choice."

Area counselor bashes pro-lifers

The politics of abortion today are not about life or choice, they are about the oppression of women, said a local family planning counselor.

The Republican platform is anti-choice, said Ruth Ever, who has been a family planning counselor for the last year and a half. "On one side of their mouth they are saying 'abortion is murder,' and on the other side they are pushing to spend even more money on bombs," she said.

But, she said, "It's women who have to bear the brunt of their political hypocrisy."

Abortion should be legal, Ever said, "because a woman has a right to make a personal choice about something that is going to affect her life, her health and her future."

Anti-choice activists make her angry, she said. "I'm sorry we have to waste our energy fighting them when we could be spending our time building better day care facilities, training women for jobs to get off welfare, building more battered women's shelters, the list goes on and on.

"But I also think [pro-life activism] is not something to be ignored, and I think things are going to get worse before they get better," she said. "But I'm optimistic we're moving into a more enlightened era."

Jennifer Wolf, a Hampshire College student writing her final thesis on adolescent abortion rights, said she is focusing her energy on getting pro-choice people to work together and be more vocal.

Anti-choice activists are really scary because they make themselves seem like the majority, she said. "Because they utilize the media so well, they can blanket an area with anti-choice propaganda.

"It makes me physically ill to think that women are being mentally tortured by having to go through a crowd of protesters to obtain an abortion," she said.

Wolf, who had an abortion last year, said the shame and guilt that society places on women who choose abortion is one of the reasons it is so difficult to talk about.

"A lot of the guilt that women feel in general can be triggered by such an emotionally charged decision," Wolf said. "Especially when you are bombarded by right-to-life propoganda.

"[Abortion] is not anything to be ashamed about," she said. "That's why I can talk so openly now. It's been kept too long as something women should feel guilty about."

Ever encouraged women considering an abortion to reach out for support. "It's very easy for women to isolate themselves when they find they are pregnant and are going to have an abortion," she said.

As a family planning counselor, Ever said she does not make assumptions about what women want when they come to see her. "I try to help women make informed choices that will affect them and their lives," she said.

Ever said she has counseled women who have gotten pregnant while using every type of contraceptive currently available. And she said, women get abortions for many reasons: for economic reasons; because they are in abusive relationships; or because their own health is in jeopardy.

"It confirms for me that [abortion] is a very personal choice," Ever said, "and no one has a right to legislate what a woman should do with her body.

"Most of the women I see are incredibly courageous," she said. "[Abortion] is not the easy way out."

University Judiciary vetoes earlier decision

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The University Judiciary decided last week a trial in which several members of the Student Government Association were censured was procedurally incorrect.

The statement by the University Judiciary (formerly the Student Judiciary) says the Sept. 25 Kropp vs. Coordinating Committee hearing was mistried because the complainant, former SGA Senator Mary Rita Kropp, did not have 25 signatures on her petition for the case.

Kropp petitioned for judicial review of a June 8 vote by the Coordinating Committee which ratified Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as SGA co-presidents in a partial capacity.

Kropp argued her case was nothing new because previous cases had been heard without the required 25 signatures. Kropp did not produce documentation of this, however, and the court could not find the 1981 case cited by Kropp in its files.

"I think if the judiciary was on the ball, it would have told me the correct way to file," Kropp said yesterday. "I think it shows the court's temporary lack of organization, by letting [the case] go through the way it did. I would guess they don't have many files from 1981, and this is not the only case they can't find." She attributed this to the transitory nature of the court positions.

Although the lack of signatures is the sole reason the court said the case was mistried, the court's statement mentions several other procedural irregularities, including the trial was held on a Sunday, and therefore was in violation of Massachusetts law.

Kropp agreed that the case probably should not have been heard on a Sunday.

Former Clerk of Courts Paul Picirrillo, voted out of office by the current judiciary, said the mistrial ruling was ridiculous.

"Apparently they didn't study it carefully," Picirrillo said. He said documentation existed proving that cases have been heard without the 25 signatures. Picirrillo said, however, he was not going to get involved with the court again.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice, who defended the Coordinating Committee in the hearing, presented several arguments which questioned the validity of the trial and filed an appeal based on these arguments after the trial. Orefice said she was happy with the decision.

"There were several problems with that hearing, and I'm glad the justices realized those problems," Orefice said.

No hearing was held to decide on the mistrial. Clerk of Courts Chris McLellan said a tribunal composed of justices Paul Gehring, Adam Scales, and Stephanie Corby met, reviewed the case, and ruled it was a mistrial.

"Basically they weren't dealing with the merits of the case," McLellan said. "They were just going over it to make sure it was procedurally correct."

Orefice said she was glad there had been no appeal hearing on the case, but if she hadn't appealed, the case might not have been re-examined.

"I didn't win on appeal, I won on a mistrial. They just realized the case was so screwed up they shouldn't have allowed it to go through. If we had won on an appeal, that would have been recognizing that there was a case," she said.

The judiciary's statement also says the court is not allowed to censure non-members of the judiciary.

Members of the Coordinating Committee were censured by the tribunal for voting to approve Silkoff/Rabinowitz. McLellan said he was uncertain about the basis of this ruling, but said he believed it came from Black's Law Dictionary.

Picirrillo said he was sure the court had the ability to censure.

Max Roach shines bright Ridley falls short, at FAC

The Jazz All Stars
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
December 10

Jazz musicians fall into two basic categories: the wheat and the chaff. Max Roach must eat a lot of Triscuits.

Saturday's Jazz All Stars performance marked the 10th anniversary of the Fletcher Henderson Memorial Scholarship. The program opened with Roach giving a comprehensive demonstration of his art on what he called "the only instrument to come out of the United States of America" — the drum set. Larry Ridley and the Jazz Legacy Ensemble finished the evening with a set that was interesting to moderate jazz enthusiasts, yet managed to put some of us to sleep, not mentioning any names.

The 64-year-old professor began with "Billy the Kid," a piece in 9/4 time, in which he layered a series of complex breaks on a pounding bass rhythm, creating the sense of the snare and toms being engaged in a furious gun-battle.

"The Drum Also Waltzes" refuted the argument that the drums are not a melodious instrument, building a subtle contrast between sounds of the different parts of the kit. For Coleman Hawkins' "Mop-Mop," Roach used audience handclaps to punctuate a be-bop beat, and his ever-popular show piece,"Mister Hi-Hat," was much appreciated by an otherwise unresponsive audience.

The high point of the set, however, saw Roach returning to the African roots of jazz. Roach's mallets evoked distant rumblings of discontent on the skins while the hi-hat hissed like a coiled mamba and a whip-crack snare hinted at violent uprising.

Roach's genius lies in his ability to create vivid images through a cacophony of sound. In a manner not dissimilar to Ornette Col-

Lecturer discusses problems facing African-American students

By JOSEPH L. HILL Jr.
Collegian Staff

Na'im Akbar Ph.D lectured to 125 people at Amherst College's Red Converse Room last Monday. The lecture was sponsored by Straight Ahead and the Black Student Union.

The lecture discussed several reasons why students at predominately White institution feel tremendous stress, have difficulty coping with life situations, and eventually "forget" who they are, "if they ever knew." according to the lecturer.

African-Americans students are in a constant struggle for self-discovery because this country is dominated by Euro-American thought and literature. Students, because they are the most intellectually gifted, represent the most important vehicle for change in this society, according to Dr. Akbar.

But it is important for these African-American students to become vehicles of change for their community. According to Dr. Akbar, "Many of us are confused about how we need to use our skills to better the lot of African-Americans."

The lecturer offered several reasons why students in environments such as UMASS often become confused and feel as if they constantly struggle to define themselves. These points are:

- African-Americans find themselves in alien environments, such UMASS. The culture around them [African-Amer.] represents a reaffirmation of somebody else's culture. By virtue of location, students try to fit themselves into "the picture."The role models that students aspire to look nothing like themselves. Looking to find your self by imitating models unlike the self is impossible.
- That the entire history that African-American students are taught is an exclusion of their reality from the world market of ideas. American society reflects a European reality, and the nature of this reality makes you believe that there is something wrong with you. If you do not suffer from the problems of Euro-Americans then you are different. To further expand on this idea, Dr. Akbar discussed the sexual idealogy of Sigmund Froid. According to the lecturer Froid studied the sexual behaviors of Jewish people and then extrapolated their sexual problems to other cultures.

African-Americans are socialized to be sympathetic to the oppressive behavior of Euro-Americans. The desire to see the cowboys beat the Indians is an example of students being unsympathetic to the Indians who were actually the victims of Euro-American oppression. According to the lecturer students are not very active in dealing with the South Africa issue because the oppressed S.Africans are portrayed as "Indians," with the White Afrikanners being analogous to the cowboys. That African-Americans do not identify with the plight of the S. African because "we identify with our own destructive forces, our loyalties lie with the cowboys," said Dr. Akbar

The lecturer went on to criticize the systematic distortion of Africa's contribution to European society. Dr. Akbar maintained that the history that students are familiar with is "a reality that we can know nothing about, it was not meant to include you," according to Dr. Akbar As examples of this, the lecturer said "it's not a mistake that the great African queen Cleopatra was portrayed by Elizabeth Taylor, or that African-Americans are made to identify with the good White father Abe Lincoln, who never intended to liberate us, as opposed to Nat Turner who fought for your freedom.

Euro-American society encourages African-Americans to be different from themselves. They are rewarded for behaving different from others in their community, and punished for expressing themselves. These punishments come in a variety of forms, for example, the demotion or lack of promotion of employees who wear "afros," according to Dr. Akbar.

African-American students face compounded problems at universities such as this because they must deal with their studies plus represent their race. The fact that students must prove to others that they are at the particular institution because of hard work, not necessarily Affirmative Action is extra work. This tends to wear students down, according to Dr. Akbar.

Dr. Akbar provided students with possible methods to help them find themselves in environments such as UMASS. The solutions offered were :

- Recognize that there is a struggle, that there is a side of you that, by virtue of being an African-American, you do not know
- Engage in active pursuit of knowledge. 90 percent of the course material does not contain the right knowledge. Do not be intimidated by another culture. Master the other cultures as you become firmly rooted in your own. Seek the truth and learn what your role in this truth is. Set-up a parallel study session. Pursue your studies of the self on your vacation time. Do not waste your time trying to find yourself at the institution, "you are not here for that," according to Dr. Akbar.
- You must be credentialed in this society if you wish to make changes. So stay in school and obtain the credentials. Know how you fit into your field. Master the Euro-American reality but do not make it your own.
- Affiliate yourself with your community. Do not spend your vacation time in an isolated (i.e. UMASS) community. Take the time to interact with people like yourself. Reaffirm your beliefs by spending free time in an environment where people think similar to yourself.
- Engage in action and practice. Put pictures on your wall of people who look like you. Put your heroes on your walls. Legitimize your presence on this campus. "Your presence here is the legacy of work that was done," by students who came before you, according to Dr. Akbar.
- Master the fear. Alienation has made you feel insecure. Realize that it is okay to love Africans and like Euro-Americans. You can be pro-Black without being anti-White.

"You are the minds that built the philosophy of the world," said Dr. Akbar.

Dr. Na'im Akbar lecturing to students from the five college area about the difficulties African-American students face at predominately White institutions, last Monday night.

Ebony productions is sponsoring an end of the semester mixer,tonight at 7 p.m. on the 10th floor of the campus center.The mixer is open to all students.

The purpose of the mixer is to unite the faculty and staff with students since interactions between the groups is at the basis of life here at UMASS, according the Ebony Productions President Rosemarie Edwards.

The mixer will be a dinner between students and the staff persons they have invited, and a discussion about the difficulties involved in being a student will be initiated by two guest speakers. The speakers are Barbara Love and Stephen Small.

Although it is too late to reserve dining space, students are encourage to attend the lectures given by the speakers and participate in conversations with the professors present.

"The mixer is a good chance for students to see that professors are people too," it is an opportunity to discuss matters outside of the normal classroom topics, according to Edwards.

X Center holds Kwanza

By THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

About 60 African-American, African and Afro-Carribean students participated yesterday in a celebration of Kwanzaa.

The event, held in the Malcom X Center, was an homage to the seven principles of Umoja (Unity), Kujichagulia (Self-Determination), Ujima (Collective of Responsibility), Ujamaa(Cooperative Economics) , Nia (Purpose),Kuumba (Creativity) and Imani (Faith) which constitute Kwanzaa.

The celebration, initiated by the staff of the Malcom X Center, began with a general greeting and explanation of the principles of Kwanzaa and its history.

Dr. Maulana Karenga started the celebration of Kwanzaa based upon his research into the traditions and philosophies of African cultures and societies. Karenga and others had long felt that African-Americans were buying into the materialism associated with Euro-American life and practices, including the celebration of Christmas. Kwanzaa, with its emphasis on African ideals of collective mentality and purpose,was conceived as an alternative to the ideology of the West and the Western Christmas tradition.

The commencement was followed by a speaker, Rick Townes. Who expounded upon his experiences with Kwanzaa during his keynote address. Next came the Candlelighting Ceremony during which students lit each of seven candles symbolizing the seven principles. Poetry readings, singing, and a social mixer and dinner followed.

Workshop given on racism

By EDWARD P SMITH
Collegian Staff

On Monday, Dec. 5, in room 168C of the Campus Center, the University of Massachusetts Baha'i Club held a workshop and open discussion on racism.

The objective of this workshop was to develop short and long term goals that would lead to new and innovative ways of dealing with the disease of racism.

The short term goals of the group is to create an environment that is conducive to enhancing unity within the group and also to help each participant develop a state of mind that would enable him/her to deal with and understand racism.

First, the group attempted to define racism. The comprehensive definition agreed upon was that racism was prejudice based on race with the power to act upon this prejudice and thereby affect the prejudge in as adverse manner.

Once defined, strategies to attack this definition were discussed. It was agreed that the power to act upon this prejudice was the strength of racism and the main arena of this power lay within the socio-economic structure of our society. Once understood and defined, methods of dealing with the virus of racism were discussed and the prevailing concepts put forth were education and the restructuring of the economic power in the America.

The groups long term goals were to continue to meet and develop a power base to infiltrate the UMass community with angles of attacking the microcosms of racism. The workshop continues Monday Dec. 12th in room 168C of the campus center, all students are invited.

Oh, to be courted by a beau

A ray of setting sunlight strikes the left page of the latest Shakespearian play I am reading. I look out the window and wonder . . . what would life be like as an Elizabethan woman?

One heck of a lot easier, for sure. Assuming I take Willie at his word — that the women he writes about actually lived as easy a life as he portrays — well, they had it made! They never had to face any of the dating dilemmas that I, a woman of the '80s, face daily.

Alise Harfield

Like initiative. Back then women like Juliet, Cleopatra, Kate and Beatrice never had to worry about asking men out; they just kind of fell in love without any hassles. Can you imagine having more suitors than you could count by hand (and toe), all waiting to fall in love with you? The competition alone sends a shiver up my spine. How about making them choose between a gold, silver, and lead locket — choose the one with my photo in it and become mine forever. (This really happened in Much Ado About Nothing.) Definitely an easy way to go about commitment.

And starvation. I doubt if they ever had to go hungry because they were afraid to unveil their eating habits in front of their Romeos. Then again, they probably had more table manners than I have had slices of onion pizza.

And hair-dos. There is always a fair maid waiting in the wings with combs and brushes waiting to fix their mistress' hair. They did quite nicely without electricity. Not the modern woman; we're stuck with blow-dryers and curling irons and hot rollers and hot stix and crimping irons and.

And Outfits. They never had to worry about outfits. Everyone dressed alike. Fashion statements, individuality, originality were non-existant. Hmmm.

And money. There was never a question as to who would pay for transportation, presents, banquets. It was always the male. In fact, as I recall in Taming of the Shrew, the woman never had any contact with cash at all. Kate had to ask permission to buy anything. In fact, her husband Petruchio even refused her on more than one occasion her request of a new outfit and cap.

Well. . .

Parents? The women of the Elizabethan age did not have to fret about meeting their beau's parents. In fact, the two sets of parents met long before the two lovers ever did . . . to agree on the dowry and the living arrangements. Maybe the women had no desire to meet her boyfriend's, I mean suitor's parents. It wouldn't matter if they liked one another; the marriage was a concrete deal no matter what.

What about love? Did they actually fall head over heels in a matter of an act? A scene? A soliloquy? Perhaps. But it is hard to believe. Personally, I think I would need a whole play to do so. Or at least a novella.

I find myself now unable to read the left page, for the sun has now been below the horizon for some time. It's actually quite dark now.

I turn on my lamp, grab my CD player, and sit in front of the monochrome computer screen. Perhaps I'll call my friend on the telephone before heating up the leftovers of my onion pizza in our microwave.

Ahh, to live in the 1600s. . .

Maybe not.

Alise Harfield is a Collegian columnist

They said it . . .

The one thing which we seek with insatiable desire is to forget ourselves, to be surprised out of our propriety, to lose our sempiternal memory and to do something without knowing how or why; in short to draw a new circle. Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm. The way of life is wonderful; it is by abandonment. The great moments of history are the facilities of performance through the strength of ideas, as the works of genius and religion. "A man," said Oliver Cromwell, "never rises so high as when he knows not whither he is going." Dreams and drunkenness, the use of opium and alcohol are the semblance and counterfeit of this oracular genius, and hence their dangerous attraction for men.

—Ralph Waldo Emerson

Bring back the Christmas tree

There is a holiday season every year that a great many people love to celebrate. We are some of those people. Unfortunately we live on campus at the University of Massachusetts.

Each year since we have lived in Orchard Hill, an evergreen tree next to the bowl has been decorated with lights for the holiday season. This year, however, no lighted tree can be seen.

There is a menorah on campus, and it is lit every night during the Jewish celebration of Chanukkah. Yet there is no visible tree in celebration of the holiday season.

Please don't misunderstand us. We don't want you to believe that we are upset with the menorah being lit. We think it's wonderful that the Jewish faith is allowed to display their belief and celebration of Chanukkah to the whole school.

Perhaps a benefit of attending a university of such diversity is that we hopefully begin to lose the prejudices we had acquired over childhood. Perhaps one of the greatest lessons we learn here is to appreciate the differences of others. Perhaps the holiday season is the most opportune time to display this appreciation.

Being students ourselves, we understand how depressing it is to be too busy to enjoy holiday preparations. Maybe we should just take some time while brushing our teeth or walking to class to think what the holiday means to us. Each individual must have their own meaning, but all of us would probably agree that the holiday season is a time to celebrate peace, hope, love and life — everything students on this campus have been trying to make people more aware of.

The Christmas tree lit in December used to be one such reminder of happiness. If having it called a Christmas tree offends people, maybe we should think of it as the celebration tree. Like the menorah, the lighted tree was not meant to offend people. Rather it was a way for the school to bring a little bit of joy into our hectic lives.

In the remaining weeks before the holiday season comes to an end, we hope the celebration tree will be lit as a symbol of peace on earth and goodwill to all.

SGA minority endangers democratic system

Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz announced their decision to accept the representation of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and take the issue of the co-presidency to court, after having exhausted all the legal recourses available to them within the Student Government Association.

The Young Communist League of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst supports their decision. We believe they have been the victims of one of the most vicious, anti-democratic attacks that UMass has seen in a while. The elected leaders of our campus have been thrown out of office because some people interpret the SGA Constitution to say that there cannot be co-presidents.

The Constitution is not the real issue here at all. The problem is the small group of right-wing extremists within the SGA who cannot accept the fact that the students voted for a Communist to be one of their leaders. They care nothing about the will of the students, the democratic process, or even student government itself, which they openly admit they are out to destroy. They will stop at nothing to keep Silkoff and Rabinowiz from taking office.

One of the most shocking aspects of this whole episode is the way in which these people have been able to influence the judicial branch of our student government, especially Bill Collins. Collins, who is named in the suit brought by Silkoff and Rabinowtiz, was clearly driven the whole time by anti-communism, but claimed he was "unbiased" and merely wanted to uphold his interpretation of the Constitution.

Steven Duplisea

The problem with the Student Judiciary's ruling is they admitted that the clause in the Constitution regarding co-presidents is "vague and ambiguous" and subject to numerous different readings. Yet they retroactively punished Silkoff and Rabinowitz for interpreting it to allow co-presidents.

What about the precedent of others who ran for co-president in previous years, without challenge? What about the tradition on our campus: the five area governments with co-presidents, the dozens of co-senators, and co-chairpersons of committees? What about the numerous original framers of our Constitution who testified that they never meant to eliminate the freedom of the students to elect co-presidents? All of this, the judiciary ignored.

What about the 19,000 students of UMass, the 1,454 who voted for Silkoff and Rabinowitz, the more than 3,000 who signed petitions supporting their right to take office, the hundreds who came to the senate to urge senators to ratify them, the countless students who have worked on behalf of them? To them, the Undergraduate Student Senate is indifferent.

Silkoff and Rabinowitz have no alternative but to take the fight for democratic rights to the District Court in Northampton, where they will ask the judge for an injunction barring the Student Judiciary from putting any constraints on the senate.

We urge all students to show their support by attending the court hearing this Friday at 2 p.m. in the Northampton Courthouse. This is your fight.

Steven Duplisea is the Chairperson of the Young Communist League of the University of Massachusetts.

Cheers for UMass

We want to congratulate the students who participated in the "peaceful mission of Christmas caroling" at Amherst College! We hope this marks the start of a new tradition that celebrates the holiday season rather than causing injuries or property damage.

It is our pleasure to encourage a festivity that contributes to a true feeling of community and we trust other winter events will follow your lead. Perhaps now college and university officials can join in the fun instead of standing ready with Amherst police to take action against dangerous behavior.

Armenians hope glasnost will bring back land

In 1923, Joeseph Stalin, in order to appease the demands of the Turkish Muslims in the Soviet republic of Azerbaijan, took a piece of land called Karabagh from the already weak and defenseless Soviet Republic of Armenia and gave it to them.

Armenians composed 95 percent of Karabagh's population. The inhabitants of Azerbaijan are primarily Muslims of Turkish origin, while the inhabitants of Armenia are virtually all Christians.

Sixty-four cumbersome years have gone by for the Armenians in Soviet Armenia since Stalin's unjustified decision.

The tensions between Armenia and Azerbaijan had been kept secret and the Soviet government had not fully tried to solve the problem of Karabagh, but recently Armenians have been protesting in Yerevan, the capital of Armenia. Up to a million people have gathered in the city's center to let Gorbechev know that if he truly believes in his "glastnost," he must correct Stalin's error.

During this same time anti-Armenian rallies were being held in Azerbaijan. Since Azerbaijanis are, in essence Turks, they have a hatred for the Armenians. Violence and murders have swept over the two republics.

Arthur Payaslian

The Azerbaijanis have killed more than 200 Armenians, if not more. In retaliation and self-defense, Armenians have also killed an estimated 40 Azerbaijanis.

Some examples of violence against Armenians are two attempts at massive poisoning by Azerbaijanis who obtained a Soviet-made poison, which kills when absorbed through the skin.

The first attempt to use this chemical against Armenians was at a sewing cooperative in Massiv, and the reported result was that 51 seamstresses were sent to the hospital.

The second attempt involved contaminated money at a Yerevan bank, which made another dozen people ill.

There was concern that the water supply in Yerevan could be a target of Azerbaijani attacks.

The Armenian Club is holding a vigil at 5 p.m. on Tuesday in front of the Student Union.

We urge all of you to attend this silent protest to show our unity with the Armenians and to show our outrage at the massacres which the Azerbaijanis are carrying out.

Goodman's best work A rare disc find

By SCOTT NANCE
Collegian Correspondent

The Best of the Asylum Years: Volume One
Steve Goodman
Red Pajamas Records

The Best of the Asylum Years: Volume One is a compilation of late singer/songwriter Steve Goodman's recordings on Asylum Records' subsidiary Red Pajamas. But the fact is, Steve Goodman never reached any sort of popular acclaim at all, so it would be hard to consider this a "greatest hits" collection.

Goodman's music can be compared to a mix between Fred Smallish or Holly Near-like folk and the soft rock of the 70's with some country thrown in. Included on this album is a fairly good rendition of Smokey Robinson's hit "Two Lovers." In fact, on the best tracks of this anthology, Goodman's voice had some of the best qualities of Robinson's silky tones, especially on "I'm Attracted To You", "One Bite of the Apple,' and the aforementioned Robinson cover.'

There's several country songs on this LP, but they are more of a traditional country nature than the Top 40 sort of country by Kenny Rogers or Hank Williams Jr. for instance. The harmonica solo on "Hand it To You" is classic. This collection offers something for a lot of musical tastes and is worth a listen.

Steve Goodman had a lot to offer us musically, and his untimely death was unfortunate. It is also unfortunate that he wasn't recognized more during his lifetime, but then again, maybe he was able to give us the variety he did because he didn't have to deal with the Top 40 formula pressure in the industry. The one concession this album makes to the commercial gods is in the title. It's sad that whoever put this work together tagged it the "Asylum Years" after his record company's parent corporation. The title could've been a statement for Steve Goodman's spirit rather than his business life.

Because of the small size of Red Pajamas Records, The Asylum Years would be quite difficult to locate in stores. To order the disc directly, send $10 postpaid for an album, $15 for CD to Red Pajamas, P.O. Box 36E77, Los Angeles Ca. 90036. Goodman's efforts are quite worth the price, despite the poor choice in packaging by the record company.

THE UNIVERSITY CHAMBER CHOIR, conducted by Wayne Abercrombie, will perform in the Bowker Auditorium tomorrow, along with soloists from the Five College Chamber Choir. Show begins at 8 p.m.

Getting Out actors speak

By MICHAEL T. PUOPOLO
Collegian Correspondent

What is Getting Out all about? It's a play about getting a second chance in life. The play focuses on Arlene, porterayed by Jami Miller. Arlene has just gotten out after serving eight years in prison for murder, drugs and prostitution , and is trying to come to terms with her past and get on with her life. She wishes to reenter society and start all over again.

According to Jami Miller, who plays her; "Arlene is an angry woman, but she is determined to do something with her life. She has an inner strength to draw on."

Arlene's mother is a woman who is totally devoid of all love for her daughter, and abuses her as a child. She is played by Jennifer Lavenhar;

"She's a very bitter woman . . . she thinks her daughter is a burden she does not deserve."

Lavenhar says she had to do a lot of research for her role; "I had to read about the horror of incest . . . it's a dangerous side of life to explore."

Jami and Jennifer are both glad that the Theater Department chose to stage this piece.

"It needs to be done," says Jennifer,"it inspires thought in people. I feel it is a real life play for alot of people."

The ending of the play is open to interpretation. Jennifer and Jami believe that there is a glimmer of hope left in Arlene's life. They feel Arlene has a chance to come to terms with the past, but there are many unanswered questions left to the the audience's imagination. Investigate for yourself when Getting Out by Marsha Norman returns to the Rand Theater this week from December 14-17. Show begins at 8 p.m.

Industrial strength wall of sound powers Puppy

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

ViviSECTvi
Skinny Puppy
Capitol

The clank of the assembly line, steel wool abrasion , open wounds, horrors beyond imagining. All these fun things (plus many others) can be found on the new Skinny Puppy album. At least, that's what it sounds like. In truth, the sounds produced by this band demand new terminology for description.

Sure, they've got drum machines, but they use percussive noises that sound more like huge industrial machines grinding away than any recognizable trap drum sound. Sure , they've got vocals, but lead singer Nivek Ogre is always either growling or shouting through loads of distortion and effects; even if you follow along with the lyric sheet, there are times when his voice goes beyond the realm of human. This is the industrial/throb pulse at its most chilling.

Tracks like "who's Laughing Now" and "Testure" are barbed attacks on crystal methanol abuse and unethical animal experimentation, respectively. The latter track has a particularly chilling moment when a disembodied voice suddenly cuts through the din and says, "I hope you make sure it's properly dead before you . . . "

The rest of the album is also topical, ranging from the AIDS scare to the destruction of the rainforests. Don't let this alienate you, however, because you really have to sit down with the lyric sheet and make a conscious effort to discern a lot of the message, although it does get easier and easier to understand Ogre's vocals the more you listen.

Ironically there is a "Parental Guidance — Explicit Lyrics" sticker found on the shrink wrap. Why should we be warned away from words we can't even understand that easily. Maybe the people responsible figured out the demonic subtext in the album title (think about it!).

It's hard to give a good idea of what this band sounds like if you've never heard of them. Indeed their originality is one of their more appealing traits. The sound alternates between individual dance tracks with beats heavy enough to reduce the wall behind your speakers, and bizzare atmospheric piece where looping samples and voices from another dimension bounce predictably around the mix. Great stuff!

To be fair, however, you should be warned that this is not a generally accessible record. Don't expect any three-chord love songs. This band tackles unpleasant topics, and does so in unpleasant ways. Whereas the Smiths had bouncy, happy music to disguise depressing lyrics, Skinny Puppy employ no such sugar coating here. The songs sound horrific because the material demands it. Before this becomes an utter turn-off, remember that like all acquired tastes, once you acclimatize yourself to the Skinny Puppy sound, it can be a rewarding experience.

In general, this is a much better record than either of the band's two previous albums. The songs are much more pointed, and they are playing up the music more (the last album was not much more than percussion and vocals).

Skinny Puppy are not for everyone, but if you want challenging electronic music with something to say, pick up viviSECTvi and find out what it feels like to be a ghost in the machine.

eman or John Coltrane he uses his instrument in rebellion against our accepted notions of time. Roach realises that silence too is a rhythm.

Larry Ridley and his Jazz Legacy Ensemble are an example of how musical talent is not necessarily innovative — or interesting. Ridley's septet gave a dignified performance, but one which lacked color and personality. Their renditions of jazz standards were too respectful, failing to do justice to the spirit of the material. Every piece was typified by repetitive solo improvisations among the three horn players. It was like listening to the Dave Brubeck Quartet.

Hank Molbey's "The Vamp," a typically uptempo bop piece, had the obligatory Charlie Parker sax solo and the cool Charlie Mingus bass, but they didn't have either the range or the depth that makes those musicians so invigorating. They kept time rather than made time. Vocalist Jann Parker provided her smooth alto for two numbers that proved her exceptional range but, again, did not make her stand out in the world of Betty Carter soundalikes. Thelonious Monk's "'Round Midnight" is always pleasant to hear, but does not necessarily benefit from the addition of lyrics. Carter's "Tight" was upbeat and worked to Parker's credit.

Ridley's original calypso tune, "'Ypso Facto," was lively, but proved to be an extremely poor choice for a closing number. Ridley gave himself several opportunities to improvise on a basic theme, but failed to take advantage of them, and Charlie Persip's rather heavy handed percussion was completely inappropriate for the breezy sound.

In past years, Roach has been joined onstage by people who can truly be considered All Stars: Ray Brown, Billy Taylor, Hank Jones and Stanley Turrentine are musicians who can turn a piece upside down without compromising its spirit. The Jazz Legacy Ensemble managed to impress, but were by no means in the same league as their predecessors in this annual benefit performance.

Roach will, no doubt, continue to explore and extend the bounds of the form. The Ridleys of this world can only follow.

Lazy Les back with blues

By BILL STEPCHEW
Special To The Collegian

Harp and Soul
Lazy Lester
Alligator Records

The blues revival is back in full swing, after a relative lull in the 70's. The success of Stevie Ray Vaughn, The Fabulous Thunderbirds and Robert Cray has brought a lot of the old-timers out of retirement and back into the recording studio and clubs. Lazy Lester, born in Louisiana as Leslie Johnson, and inactive since his work with Lightning Slim in the mid 60's, now follows last year's release, Lazy Lester Rides Again with Harp and Soul, a King Snake/Alligator Records collaboration. The album is a collection of covers and remakes of late fifties Excello recordings, Lester's former label.

At Excello, Lester worked with guitarists Lightning Slim and Slim Harpo, and producer Jay Miller to forge a blend of traditional country blues and the R&B tinged Chicago style of Muddy Waters, Jimmy Rogers and Little Walter. The Excello sound provided the format for many of today's guitar-harmonica bands like The Fabulous T-Birds, Sugar Ray and the Bluetones and the James Harman band. The Rolling Stones, The Yardbirds, The Moody Blues and other Brtish explosion bands of the 60's credit the Excello recordings as a main inspiration.

Harp and Soul features Guitar Slim's "I Don Got Over It", Lester's own hits "Bloodstains On The Wall" and "Take Me In Your Arms", the classic New Orleans ballad; "Dark End Of The Street", Slim Harpo's "Raining In My Heart", and a personal favorite; Eddie Boyd's "Five Long Years". The cover of "Mannish Boy" here borrows from the revved-up Yardbirds version as much as from the Bo Diddley or Muddy Waters versions.

The album is interesting from an historical as well as from a musical viewpoint. The record trades the roughness of the early recording studio techniques, where they often used a rolled up newspaper on a cardboard box for a snare drum sound, for the smooth, clear high fidelity of today's high-tech multi-track facilities. While Harp and Soul loses some of the simple charm and urgency of the originals, it is a fine collection of ballads and straight ahead blues, with the snappy addition of the instrumental "Alligator Shuffle".

Lazy Lester's latest effort has a relaxed, well, lazy feel to it, making it great if you want something not too fast or too loud. Kenny Neal, one of the many musical offspring of New Orleans blues godfather Raful Neal, provides smooth, understated guitar tracks, consistent with Lester's laid back style. For harmonica players, this album is a textbook of classic harp riffs. When Little Walter died in 1968, Lazy Lester was heir apparent to the blues harp crown. Whether due to misfortune, mismanagement, or whatever, he never capitalized on his talent with commercial success. He accompanied Lightning Slim for the first half of the 60's, then faded from sight until his recent return from retirement, under the encouragement and support of his agent and washboard player, Fred Reif.

Harp and Soul is a nice addition to any blues collection and would make a great holiday gift to a blues head. Hopefully, this album and others like it will spawn a new generation of blues inspired supergroups to continue the tradition.

First Night, New Year fun

Northampton is by far the smallest town in Massachusetts to launch a First Night celebration. The event provides a way for the Pioneer Valley community to come together in the celebration of life tyhat symbolises the New Year.

First Night has become such a tradition that it is hardly fitting to call it an "alternative" New Year's celebration. Public response to the event has grown stronger with each successive year, and it is now widely acknowledged to be the accepted celebratory festival in the community.

First Night is comprised of 23 separate performances which take place at 8 downtown Northampton venues including the Academy of Music, the People's Institute and the Northampton Center for the Arts. Among those appearing will be the Pioneer Valley Ballet, the Mitch Chakour Band and the Carlos Anderson Gospel Singers.

From 2 p.m. until well after the New Year chimes, the town will become a performance kaleidoscope, and admission to all the shows is free with the purchase of a First Night Button. These are priced $6 for Adults and $3 for children and seniors.

The Pleasant St. Theater will be offering a $1 discount to First Night Button holders for their 2 p.m. special showing of Harold Lloyd's vintage classic of silent comedy, "Safety Last," complete with the organ of A.T. Purseglove.

Throughout First Night, street performers under the direction of Mack Morrison and Impish Grin Productions will add to the festive fun, while free coffee is available to First Night Button holders at many downtown restaurants.

First Night needs volunteers for ushering, hospitality on site button sales, and limited technical and security work. If you're interested, contact Keen Hahn or Stephen Calcagnjno at the Center for the Arts in Northampton by calling 584-7327.

Slaying suspects sought

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — Investigators said yesterday they are making headway in their search for suspects in a series of related slayings in southeastern Massachusetts.

In a news conference yesterday at the site where a sixth female body was found a day earlier, Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina said informants and authorities have developed possible suspects.

"We have a list of potential suspects. There are people who are known to do things like this and there are people who are giving us some information," Pina said.

The news conference took place in a wooded area about a quarter mile from the Reed Road exit off Interstate 195 in Dartmouth. Nearby, police were still collecting parts of the badly decomposed female body.

The skeletal remains, found Saturday afternoon, marked the sixth female body found since July in a 6 to 8 mile square area outside this fishing port of 98,000 people. Pina has said the five bodies found up until Saturday were likely the victim of the same killer or killers.

Investigators have identified three of the other bodies. All three were women between the ages of 25 and 36, and all ties to New Bedford's Weld Square neighborhood, known for prostitution and drug sales.

Pina said the latest find, who remained unidentified as of Sunday, could not definitely be linked to the other five. He did say the woman found by police was "very similar" to the others in that she was partially clad.

The sixth body appeared to have been in the woods longer than any of the others, possible since last spring, Pina said.

Douglas Ubelaker, an expert on forensics from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., was scheduled to perform an autopsy on the sixth body today. Three bodies remain unidentified.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles closing in on G.I. Joe as top toy

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — Four teen-age turtles wielding Ninja weapons, the brainchildren of a sandwich maker and a self-described hack cartoonist, are threatening to close ranks on G.I. Joe at the top of the Christmas toy market.

"They are just flying off the shelves," said David Valentine, a toy industry analyst for Standard & Poors.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles have hit No. 11 in the Top and Hobby World charts of best sellers, five spots behind G.I. Joe, just four years after they were conceived by Peter Laird and Kevin Eastman during a late-evening sketching duel.

Store clerks report they can't keep up with demand for the goofy turtles with their slice-and-dice arm action and their silly one-liners ("One good turtle deserves another").

"It's insane," said Eastman, 26. "Pete and I really had no idea what we were unleashing. We were just two wild-eyed kids who just wanted to do comic books."

They keep shop in a rundown building on a back street of this college town, and have given up on trying to identify their studio because fans keep stealing the signs.

"We've lost five so far," said Mirage Studio Executive Director Cheryl Prindle.

Eastman, then an occasional student at the University of Massachusetts, said he tracked down Laird, who scraped a living out of drawing illustrations for local newspapers, in 1982 because their cartoons looked so much alike. They became fast friends, joined by a love for Marvel Comics illustrator Jack Kirby.

The turtles were created after what Eastman called a heavy dose of "T.J. Hooker" and "Love Boat" at an apartment the two men shared while Laird's fiance finished her studies at the University of New Hampshire. Laird was still free-lancing cartoons. Eastman got by making sandwiches at a local restaurant.

"We had been watching a bunch of horrible TV and we started throwing stuff at each other," Eastman said last week. "We found we had this little beastie that we really fell in love with."

The beast soon had three brothers, all named after Renaissance painters, and a weird history involving a pool of goo in a New York sewer and a rat with the powers of a Ninja master.

New jail to keep moms, kids together

BOSTON (AP) — A new kind of jailhouse officially opens here today designed to keep new mother and their babies together and out of a conventional jail setting for good.

"It's a historic step for the state and the country, to show respect for the mother and infant bond," said Lyla Austin, co-director of Social Justice for Women, a private, non-profit advocacy group that will run the $550,000 program under a contract with the State Department of Correction.

Although a few other prison systems in the country make efforts to allow mothers to remain for a time with their infants, the Neil J. Houston House in the city's Roxbury section will offer features unavailable elsewhere, officials said.

Inmates on the 15-bed facility will be confined to the building, but have access to counselors, drug rehabilitation, help to reintegrate with the community and family therapy as well as medical care during pregnancy and afterward.

Scholarships available for Financial Aid Students

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.
Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.
Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.
Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.
There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.
Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

Secretary prepares to defend budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Education Lauro F. Cavazos appears to be bracing for criticism over cuts in school support when President Reagan presents Congress with his final budget next month.

Cavazos, who promised at his confirmation to fight for "the best funding possible," now says only "I did the best I could" in arguing for education money.

He did not disclose any figures for his department, but Office of Management and Budget officials have said they cut $35 billion across the government to hold the deficit to $100 billion in Reagan's Cabinet and one of the holdovers who will serve in President-elect Bush's Cabinet, was asked in an interview with The Associates Press if the budget will reflect his principles.

The former Texas Tech University president hesitated, then replaied, "I really don't know how to answer that. And I'm honest about that. I did the best I could. That's all I can tell you. ... That's going to be the budget and that's the one I will defend."

Cavazos said it is too soon to talk about what shape the budget will take in the Bush administration, or what programs he will launch to combat such problems as illiteracy and the steep dropout rate.

However, Bush did make several detailed campaign proposals to boost education spending, including a new $500 million "Merit Schools" program to help the disadvantaged and $50 million for magnet schools.

Cavazos told the Human Resources Committee at his Sept. 9 confirmation hearing, "I can promise this committee and promise this nation that I will do everything I can to get the best funding possible for our Department of Education."

In the interview, Cavazos, a former medical school dean who was sworn in to Reagan's Cabinet barely 12 weeks ago, said, "Some people have been concerned that I've not come up with specific programs on how to do that or do the other. I think it's premature very frankly.

"I've said to people, 'Look I work for President Reagan until noon on Jan. 20. And I will bring all of my skill, my energies and my commitment to that presidency. I signed on for that," he said.

"But I'm also a holdover," he added. In the Bush administration "we will be getting into some rather specific kinds of programs."

Cavazos, the first Hispanic to serve in the Cabinet, has cut quite a different figure than his brash predecessor, William J. Bennett, who made headlines with pungent criticism of teacher unions and other running America's school and colleges.

Cavazos has sought to mend fences with those same groups and to enlist them in what he hopes will be a national effort of unprecendented scope to educate every child to his or her fullest potential.

Asked if he shared Bush's desire to bring "fresh faces" to government, Cavazos said, "Absolutely. We'll have 90 percent turnover" in the top ranks at the Department of Education.

Cavazos said he thinks the public has not yet taken to heart the severity of problems in its schools, despite the alarms sounded in the 1983 'A Nation at Risk" report.

The American people "must not recognize the seriousness of the problem or else they'd have gone out and done something about it," said Cavazos, son of a foreman on the King Ranch, one of the biggest cattle-raising operations in Texas.

Patriots still alive after overtime win over Bucs

FOXBORO (AP) — Jason lives. So do Tony Eason and the New England Patriots.

Jason Staurovsky, who missed a 27-yard field goal on the final play of a 24-21 loss to Indianapolis two weeks earlier, succeeded from that distance 3:08 into overtime as the Patriots improved their playoff chances with a 10-7 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers yesterday.

And it was the oft-injured, seldom-used Eason who made it possible when a tie or a loss would have killed any realistic playoff hopes the Patriots had.

He shook off the cobwebs of 13 months on the sidelines to spark New England's two scoring drives with his passing.

"I hadn't taken a snap since Nov. 1, 1987, so it has been a long while for me," said Eason, who started instead of Doug Flutie, who was healthy but had throwing troubles while starting the last nine games. "I didn't know what was going to happen."

Eason completed 16 of 27 passes for 155 yards and two interceptions. In his nine starts, Flutie had more completions just once and more yards just four times.

"It was a gutsy call," by coach Raymond Berry to use him, Eason said. The starter was unknown until Eason took the field for the first New England series.

It was a gutsy kick by Staurovsky under pressure and into a stiff wind on a day when the wind-chill factor sank to 25 below zero.

"It might have affected me on a 52- or a 45-yarder, but not on a 27-yarder," Staurovsky said of the wind.

The rookie, who took his miss in Indianapolis very hard, said "I always had faith in myself.

"I had no time to think about," Sunday's kick, he said. "It wasn't like the other field goal (against Indianapolis) that I missed where I had two whole minutes to think about it" during a time out.

New England, 9-6, can get a wild-card berth if it wins its last game next Saturday at Denver and Cleveland loses tonight at Miami or next Sunday against Houston. If it loses to Denver, New England can make the playoffs only if Cleveland loses both games and Indianapolis loses its remaining game at Buffalo.

"I'm very proud of the way my team played" in the chilly conditions, Bucs' coach Ray Perkins said, "but the Patriots did it when the game was on the line."

The Bucs, 4-11, trailed 7-0 on Robert Perryman's 6-yard touchdown run with 7:24 gone in the third quarter. They tied the game on Vinny Testaverde's 15-yard pass to Mark Carrier and John Carney's extra point with 2:09 left in the fourth quarter.

The Bucs won the overtime coin toss and chose to kick off with a stiff wind at their backs on the frigid day. Sammy Martin's 34-yard return gave the Patriots the ball at their 35-yard line.

"I will make that decision 10 out of 10 times," Perkins said of kicking with the wind. "I felt like my defense could turn the ball over for my offense."

Eason, who started and played yesterday for the first time in 23 games, completed passes of 21 yards to Irving Fryar and 4 yards to Russ Francis after the kickoff.

After an incompletion, Eason found Fryar for 26 yards and a first down at the Bucs' 14. John Stephens then ran 2 and 3 yards to set up the winning kick by Staurovsky.

It was the first victory in 11 overtime games for the Patriots, the only NFL team which hadn't won an overtime game. Tampa Bay is 4-7-1 in overtime contests.

Tampa Bay had the NFL's fifth best run defense and Flutie had thrown poorly and infrequently even though the Patriots were 6-3 in the last nine games, all with him at quarterback.

Eason missed the last eight games last season with a separated shoulder suffered Nov. 1, 1987. He sat out the first 14 games this year after offseason surgery for nerve damage in his throwing arm.

Carney had kicked a 47-yard field goal for Tampa Bay early in the fourth quarter, but a tripping penalty then nullified it. The Bucs then punted.

With temperatures in the teens and winds of 20 mph to 30 mph, the team from Florida struggled on offense despite a career-high 101 yards on 23 carries by William Howard. His previous high was 78 yards.

Injuries kept Bruce Hill, the Bucs' top receiver, and Lars Tate, their leading rusher, out of the game.

All three of the game's field goal attempts were into the wind, and the first two fell short.

Carney missed a 40-yard attempt with 3:27 left in the first quarter. Tampa Bay had reached the Patriots' 23 on that drive, its deepest penetration of the half.

With 1:56 remaining in the second quarter, Staurovsky's 36-yard attempt fell short and to the left of the goal posts. The Patriots reached the Tampa Bay 16 on that possession, their deepest penetration of the half.

The Patriots had taken a 7-0 lead on Perryman's run that capped a 12-play, 65-yard

Minutemen showed depth however, in taking the second, third and fourth spots to limit SCSU's point gain. The top swimmer for UMass in the 200 was John Gardiner, followed by Scott Milbert and Reich.

Next, in the 50-yard freestyle the Minutemen dominated as McIver took first with a time of 21.69 seconds, followed by G.T. Ladd in second and Yunker in fourth.

UMass took first and third in the next event, the 200-yard individual medley. Roger Kennedy came in number one with a time of 1:59.12, and Frank Sampson brought up third.

In the one- and three-meter diving competitions, Dan Chesnicka regained his winning form, sweeping the top spots in both events with scores of 242.0 points in the one-meter and 262.10 off the three-meter board. He also received great support from teammates Dave Wells, who took third in both events, and Steve Myers, who took fourth in both.

The Minutemen delivered a 1-2 punch in the 200-yard butterfly as Kennedy took first with a time of 2:00.68 followed closely by Gwilliam in second.

UMass took three of the top four spots in the 100-yard freestyle as McIver grabbed first with a time of 47.58 seconds and teammates Ladd and Rutherfors took third and fourth, respectively.

In the 200-yard backstroke, Ehle and Sampson hauled in first and second, with Ehle getting the winning time of 2:04.25. Then in the 500-yard freestyle Robertson continued his success in the long distance events, touching first with a time of 4:50.46. Gardiner took third and Milbert fourth in support.

The 200-yard breaststroke was the Minutemen's worst event of the day as they struggled to grab third and fourth. Sampson got the number three spot, followed by Chouinard.

In the final event, the 400-yard freestyle relay, there was a bit of controversy. The UMass team of Ladd, Yunker, Reich and Robertson appeared to have come in first with a time of 3:16.07. However, they were disqualified because the referee felt that Robertson had left early for his leg of the event. As a result, Southern Connecticut took first and the UMass team of Milbert, Kennedy, Rutherford and Gardiner placed second. Fortunately, by this time the meet was locked up for the Minutemen and no big protest had to be lodged.

Heading into intersession, Yarworth is now just concentrating on mixing in adequate practice time with academics.

Then Reid took the microphone, but not before Burton reminded the crowd that UMass had been picked to finish seventh this season.

Reid had captains Nick Salmon and Bill Buttler join Palazzi, and McKeown, the other captain at center court, then offered the reason for the team's success.

"All along, this has been a team of great, great humility," Reid said. "I don't know if we're the most talented team but we're really together."

Reid finished his talk by telling the crowd one of the things that helps him the most in recruiting. "One of the first things I tell someone I'm recruiting," Reid said, "is that we have the best fans in the world."

With that, the fans cheered, the Minutes came out on to the court, and it was business as usual.

Men's swimming drowns Southern Connecticut, 154-89

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team cruised to a 154-89 victory over Southern Connecticut State University Saturday afternoon at Boyden Pool.

"I'm very pleased with the way we're swimming," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth.

Yarworth had every reason to be pleased as the Minutemen took first place in all but three events, upping their record to 3-1 going into the intersession break.

The Minutemen began the meet with a top spot finish in the 400-yard medley relay as the team of Dave Ehle, Pete Koback, Evan Gwilliam and Brian McIver put in the fastest time of 3:39.67. A third place finish was added by the UMass team of Mike Yunker, Bill Chouinard, Sean Rutherford and Pete Reich.

In the 1000-yard freestyle, Minuteman long distance ace Jim Robertson faced a tough challenge from Southern Connecticut swimmer Paul Zakezwski. From the beginning it was a dead-even heat with neither man getting more than a head-length lead on the other. But with a hundred yards to go Robertson turned it on and pulled away from his opponent, finishing with the top time of 9:59.03. Teammate Will Riddell took third.

In the 200-yard freestyle, Southern Connecticut pulled out its own ace in swimmer Mike Sportini, who outdistanced the UMass swimmers from the start. The

UNH led 69-65 as Kris Kinney, who threw in a game-high 23 points, hit a pull-up jumper with 2:35 to go. The Minutewomen cut the deficit in half with 2:04 to go on Christel Zullo's drive to the hoop. Helen Freeman (team-high 18 points) then tied the affair, muscling inside and throwing up a shot that teased the rim before falling in.

After trading turnovers, Kinney buried a short one from the baseline to make it 71-69 with just 47 seconds left. However Zullo drove in from the left and threw up a six-foot scoop that dropped as she was fouled. She then canned the freebie and the Minutewomen were up, 72-71 with 34 seconds left.

New Hampshire would have a final chance, but the Minutewomen, who had played smart ball to that point, still had two fouls to waste. They used them both, neither in the act of shooting, giving UNH the ball out of bounds with two ticks left.

"We knew [about the fouls] and we shared that in our last time out," Hewelt said. "I told Christel and Sue [Serafini] to go for the steal. We had nothing to lose."

UNH coach Kathy Sanborn called time out to set up a last shot, and it was pretty obvious who was going to get the call.

Indeed, it was Kinney who took the inbound, but at 16 feet from the right side she was way out of her range. She proved it with a desperation heave that fell three feet short of the rim.

"We knew that was the only player they'd go to," Hewelt said of Kinney.

As has been the case for much of the year, the Minutewomen played this game in fits and spurts. They came out of the box sluggish, as Kinney and Co. were eating them up early.

Kinney scored seven points as New Hampshire raced out to a 9-2 lead. Then it was the long range tactics of guard Julie Donlan (19 points, including four three-pointers) that put the 'Cats up by as much as nine, 20-11 with 10:36 left in the half.

At this point, Hewelt went to the bench for guards Serafini and Trish Riley. The move seemed to light a fire under the Minutewomen. Serafini responded with seven quick points, including a three-pointer from the top that cut the edge to three, 23-20.

UNH got one back, but then UMass burned them, rattling off 18 straight to blow it open, 38-25. Freeman had eight points over that span as the Minutewomen did almost everything right.

"Sue Serafini and Trish Riley did a great job off the bench. They were a great spark in the first half," Hewelt said. "We hit the boards hard and then kicked it out and ran. That's what makes it happen."

Serafini had all nine of her points in the first half, topped only by 10 from Freeman.

In closing the half, UMass shot 13-of-16 compared to just 3-of-14 prior to the run. Meanwhile UNH dipped below ice level, clanging at a 2-of-17 pace that included eight straight misses. UMass outscored the Wildcats 29-7 in that stretch.

"We looked great, going up and down the floor. We wanted that team to come out in the second half," Hewelt said. "But they stayed in the locker room.

New Hampshire went back to its weapon, Kinney, to start the second half, as it closed the gap back to six at 46-40. But another UMass run pushed it back to 12, 54-42 when Zullo converted on a great 3-on-1 from Wilbor and Riley with 13:02 left.

What happened next almost killed them. As if some scientist had dipped them in liquid nitrogen, the Minutewomen went 10:11 without scoring from the floor. Most times a team wouldn't be able to get away with such antics and still win.

UMass was able to cash in on 9-of-12 free throw shooting in that span, but nine points in 10 minutes wouldn't be enough to hold any team off. By the time UMass would connect again from the field, on Pytko's wide open jumper with 2:51 left, UNH had pulled ahead, 67-63.

But once again, regardless of any effort in the contrary, the Minutewomen were able to pull it out. They can't be happy with their performance, but as long as the W's keep rolling in, there can be no arguing.

"We're happy to get out of here with a win, but it was ugly, ugly, ugly basketball," Hewelt said. "At this point, we're not fussy. We'll take all the W's we can get."

"We'll take them anyway we can get them," said Zullo, who had 14 points.

They've found a lot of ways to get them in the last week, but the bottom line is that they're getting them. They're 5-0, with a long break before their next action in the Bath Ironworks Tournament in Portland, ME (Dec. 28-29). Right now, that's all that really matters.

The Minutemen looked like a different team in the first half Saturday night. They outscored Northeastern 16-7 over the final 6:20 of the period to establish a 42-32 halftime lead that seemed comfortable. But Calipari knew better.

"We played almost errorless ball in the first half," Calipari said. "But I said to them at halftime 'They're gonna make a run.' I told them to expect it and then make their run back."

Northeastern did, indeed, make a run. The Huskies scored the first nine points in the second half and 12 of the first 14 to tie the score 44-44.

But the Minutemen did something out of character. They retaliated, and slowly rebuilt their lead.

"We needed to just run the offense," David Brown said. "Coach told us we should have kept going at them the way we did in the first half. Jimmy got us started."

McCoy took charge, hitting a three-pointer from the right side and a 16-foot jumper.

After a three-point play by Northeastern's Tarone Thornton made it 49-47, UMass went on a 12-0 run, getting four points each from McCoy and Matt Anderson.

"I wanted to concentrate on rebounding, and getting the ball inside to Chase and Tate," McCoy said. "But I hit a couple of 12-footers and I felt comfortable."

McCoy wasn't the only one who looked at ease on the court. David Brown had a slow start in the first three games but scored a game-high 22 against New Hampshire in a 73-72 win last Wednesday night.

Saturday night, Brown was 7-of-14 from the floor and 7-of-8 from the foul line.

"I was thinking too much at the beginning of the season, instead of just being myself," Brown said. "But the good thing is if I'm not hitting, the young guys pick it up. We're playing as a team and we're playing with heart."

And that's what allowed the Minutemen to knock off Northeastern, a team that just last week beat an Atlantic 10 Conference power, the University of Rhode Island.

"They are a talented, talented team," Calipari said. "But our kids worked hard."

Chase said, "It was a real big win. Beating New Hampshire was the biggest win because we hadn't been playing well. And the way we played against New Hampshire carried over to this game."

The Minutemen will try to carry it over one more time before the semester ends.

Hoop du-jour: The five players that finished the game for UMass were 6-foot-5 David Brown, 6-foot-7 Michael Byrnes, and guards Anton Brown, McCoy, and Ishmael Butler. Big men Chase, Tate and Anderson had all fouled out.

Six-foot-9 center Ben Grodski sprained his ankle badly in practice Friday and did not play against Northeastern.

Minutemen, 79-69

Massachusetts (79): David Brown 7 7-8 21; Duane Chase 3 5-8 11; John Tate 2 0-1 4, Anton Brown 5 4-5 15, Jim McCoy 8 2-5 19, Ishmael Butler 1 4-5 6, Matt Anderson 1 1-2 3, Michael Byrnes 0 0-0 0. Team Totals: 27 23-34 79.

Northeastern (69): Darrick Lewis 8 3-10 16; Steve Carney 2 0-0 4; Barry Abercrombie 1 2-2 4; Dexter Jenkins 3 1-4 7; George Yuille 2 2-4 6, Tarone Thornton 6 3-6 15; John Ndukwu 3 2-4 9; Chenault Terry 1 0-0 2; Maurice Brightbaup 0 0-0 0; Marvin Gantt 2 2-4 6. Team Totals: 36 13-28 69.

Football team honored during hoop halftime

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Fans at the Curry Hicks Cage got more than just the usual look at the UMass Minutes dancers at halftime of the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team's 79-69 win over Northeastern University Saturday night.

They got a look at glimpse at a former local celebrity and another look at some stars of the fall 1988 season when Hub Burton hosted a tribute to the UMass football team.

The Minutemen went 8-4, tied Delaware for the Yankee Conference championship, and went to the playoffs for the first time in 10 years.

Burton, a former sportscaster on Springfield television, said, "It's good to be home," then proceeded to honor quarterback Dave Palazzi, linebacker John McKeown and head coach Jim Reid.

Palazzi was introduced as the 1985 Rookie of the Year who has set or tied eight UMass records. Burton then said the name McKeown has become synonomous with excellence on defense.

College chief takes action against cuts

By the Associated Press

HOLYOKE — Holyoke Community College President David M. Bartley furloughed 80 percent of his part-time faculty, closed admissions for the spring semester, and doused the lights on the college Christmas tree yesterday in response to $320,000 in cuts ordered to help ease the state's fiscal problems.

Bartley, a former speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives and state secretary of administration and finance, acknowledged that shutting off the holiday decorations would not save much money. But, he said, "it seems appropriate since the governor's Christmas present to higher education is worse than getting a lump of coal in your stocking."

Because of the faculty cutback and the elimination of 47 part-time teachers, the 2,900-student community college would have to limit enrollments for the first time in its 42-year history, he said. He estimated that about 400 students will be turned away for the spring semester.

"Those who will be turned away have no viable alternatives," he said. "They are not the affluent who can afford to enroll in private colleges, nor can they abandon their family responsibilities and move to another state where public education receives adequate support."

Bartley also said that the college, which instituted a special $6 per credit hour fee following earlier cutbacks in an attempt to retain required courses, would have to dump more than 100 class sections, including some courses required for graduation, and close its library and other facilities on the weekends.

"Is this the result of the economic miracle in Massachusetts?" Bartley told more than 400 students at a noontime rally. "It is time for the governor and the legislature to face reality. They can call it what they wish — new taxes or revenue enhancement — but the reality is that we must increase revenues.

Students attack computer quizzing system

By C.C. SANDORFI
and STEPHEN PANGIONE
Collegian Correspondents

Editor's note: Pseudonyms were used for the students in the following article to protect their identities.

Plato was a fourth century Greek philosopher who advocated the search for true knowledge.

His name has been lent to a computer system designed to augment the learning of students at the University of Massachusetts.

However, some math students find that instead of enhancing their lives, the system can detract from their learning.

Students in Math 127 and 128 are using the Plato computer system to take weekly quizzes they would otherwise complete in discussion sections. The system, located on the seventh floor of the Tower Library, has been used by the Mathematics and Statistics Department for the last two years. Other departments using the system include Home Economics, German, Chemistry, Physics, Chemical Engineering and Computer and Information Sciences.

Professor Thurlow Cook, associate chairman of the math department, said, "This system promotes independent thinking."

But the students' behaviors do not reflect his attitudes. Students often take the quizzes in groups of two or more and agree this is a common practice. Quiz taking can become a group effort.

Lisa, a student in Math 127, said, "Working together is pretty common. If you can't get the answer to a question, you can just walk around and ask somebody."

Professors responded to questions about students teaming together to complete quizzes.

> "You don't learn a thing on the computers."
> —Math 128 student

"It wouldn't terribly bother me if a group of, say, ten worked together, as long as each member of the team learned something," said Jim Shields, who instructs a Math 127 section.

Some students feel that computer quizzes do not promote learning. "You don't learn a thing on the computers," said Sue, who takes Math 128. She prefers discussion sections where she can ask questions.

However, administrators in the math department have concluded that discussion sections are not very beneficial to the students, according to Cook.

The department began using the Plato system after examining attendance in discussion sections, he said. If quizzes were given in discussion, he said, attendance was estimated at 95 percent; but when no quizzes were given, attendance dropped to less than 10 percent.

Cook said, "In my opinion, discussion sections served no educational purpose other than giving tests."

As a result, discussions were dropped in favor of computerized weekly quizzes.

Lisa does not like the change. "If you have a question, you have to wait until class to ask it, and there are 300 other people with questions, too. In a discussion, there are only 20."

She added, "A TA [teaching assistant] can tell you why you did something wrong, instead of you just sitting there and wondering."

Without TA's, many students said working in groups is the only way to arrive at the answers.

Cook said it is up to the student to choose his own approach to the quiz. "This system allows students the maximum amount of choice," he said. "I don't encourage cheating because it's silly."

Lawsuit defendants challenged

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The suit by Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz seeking to remove barriers from their holding the office of Student Government Association co-presidents may unjustly name three of the defendants.

In addition, the complaint filed with Hampshire Superior Court by the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts incorrectly alleges that a former SGA Clerk of Courts involved in the Silkoff/Rabinowitz case lived with one of the opponents of the co-candidates.

Allegations of incorrect facts in the case were brought to the attention of the Collegian by a source who asked not to be named.

Three defendants named in the suit, Milind Bharvirkar, Nancy Casey, and Pamela Hickey, who are justices of the University Judiciary (formerly Student Judiciary) were to have heard an appeal by Silkoff/Rabinowitz on Oct. 25.

The three were to re-hear evidence in the case on the intent of the framers of the SGA Constitution. They were to decide the framers' intent regarding co-presidents.

However, the case never came to trial because then-Clerk of Courts Paul Piccirillo was removed from office by justices of the Student Judiciary.

According to Edward Etheredge, one of the attorneys involved in the case, the three are named because they did not act on the co-presidency question.

"That appellate court didn't do anything," Etheredge said. "My concern with the [Bharvirkar, Casey, Hickey] court was that they were supposed to conduct some rehearing, which they never did."

An appellate tribunal of justices heard an appeal by Silkoff/Rabinowitz last April and remanded, or sent the case back to original justices to be reheard. These original appellate justices are not named in the suit.

Bharvirkar, Casey and Hickey could not be reached for comment yesterday.

Rabinowitz and Silkoff filed suit last Wednesday alleging their civil rights were violated because they have been prevented from holding office. The suit names as defendants the University Judiciary Student Supreme Court, six justices of the court, former SGA Attorney General Bill Collins, and the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees.

Rabinowitz refused to comment on the allegations except to say, "If there's some sort of a discrepancy we have to work that out." Silkoff could not be reached for comment.

Incorrect roommates

The suit also alleges that former Clerk of Courts Paul Graf, who was clerk during some of the Silkoff/Rabinowitz trials last semester, lived in the same suite in Cashin Residence Hall as SGA Sen. Aram Hamparian, who ran against Silkoff/Rabinowitz in the last SGA presidential elections.

Etheredge at first refused to comment on this, then said it was his understanding that "[Graf] lived in at least the adjoining suite [to Hamparian]." Etheredge said he understood that Graf, while in his position as clerk, had lived with Hamparian so he could work for the Hamparian campaign.

"He should have separated himself," Etheredge said. "There shouldn't have been any ex-partie [outside of court] conversations."

University records show that Hamparian did not live in the same suite as Graf, according to Stephanie Pratt, an assistant at the UMass Housing Assignment Office.

At least 42 killed in rail disaster

LONDON (AP) — Three trains collided in south London at the height of yesterday morning's rush hour, killing at least 42 people and injuring more than 100 in a vast tangle of crushed metal, the London Ambulance Service said.

A spokeswoman for the ambulance service, requesting anonymity, said 42 bodies were accounted for and "we are expecting to find more bodies."

She said 115 passengers were hospitalized, 30 with serious injuries, and others were treated where they lay on the ground and in the wreckage. Other ambulance service spokesmen said some people had to have limbs amputated to extricate them from the wreckage.

The British Transport Police, a law enforcement unit controlled by state-owned British Rail, said 53 people died in the crash. But officials at the scene said they could not confirm the transport police figure.

Lou Gill, the Fire Brigade's chief divisional officer, said all survivors had been removed about five hours after the crash near busy Clapham Junction just before 8 a.m. But he said he feared that when the mangled wreckage was finally cleared "there may be further bodies underneath."

Rescue workers used metal cutters to pry open rail cars strewn like matchwood across the tracks. Scores of people suffered minor injuries and were treated on the scene. Transport Police spokesman Jim Rowe said at the scene that about 1,500 people were aboard the 20 passenger carriages involved.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher came out of a meeting in her Cabinet room and told reporters she was "grief-stricken."

"It brings home to us very much that families have lost some of their dearest people . . . it is even more poignant just coming up to Christmas," she said. She promised an inquiry.

Rowe said a crowded passenger train traveling at 40 mph to 50 mph slammed into the back of a stationary commuter train about a quarter-mile south of Clapham Junction. An empty freight train traveling in the opposite direction then hit the wreckage, he said.

Hijacker faces extradition after attempt

MIAMI (AP) — A Cuban exile tricked into thinking he had diverted a jet with 128 people to Havana faces extradition from Grand Turk for only the second hijacking attempt of a domestic US airliner in 2½ years, officials said.

Weary but unharmed, the 121 passengers aboard the TWA Boeing 727 flight from San Juan arrived in Miami on Sunday evening. They said the hijacker was not violent and was shocked when he was arrested on Grand Turk, part of the British colony of Turks and Caicos Islands southeast if the Bahamas.

"He was horrified to realize he had been tricked," said passenger Willie Douglas of Montgomery, Ala.

Robert Blattner, a spokesman at TWA headquarters in St. Louis, identified the would-be hijacker as Felix Sanchez Rodriguez, 26, who left Cuba during the 1980 Mariel boatlift.

Larry Torrence of FBI's Miami office said the suspect remained in Grand Turk and extradition proceedings were scheduled to begin yesterday. A device that Rodriguez claimed to be a bomb proved to be harmless, officials said.

Blattner said Rodriguez apparently wanted to return to Cuba to see his ailing mother.

"A couple of times he leaned over some people and told them everything's going to be all right," said passenger Tom Patri.

The pilot of the Flight 469 was able to get permission to land on Grand Turk island where police were able to convince Rodriguez he was in Havana, Miller said.

Luis Carlos Motta of Cali, Colombia, who acted as an interpreter during the hijacking, said Rodriguez tapped him on the shoulder and gave him a letter that said in red ink "This is a hijacking." He told Motta he had a bomb and said it would be activated by his watch.

Scouts get in the spirit selling Christmas trees

By JOHN O'LEARY
Collegian Correspondent

The Boy Scouts have a motto: "Be prepared." This year local Boy Scouts are prepared to provide you with a beautiful Christmas tree for the holidays.

Once again, the members of Amherst Troop 504 and Pelham Troop 508 are selling Christmas trees in Amherst Center to help raise funds for the upcoming year. Located in the park at the intersection of Triangle and North Pleasant streets, the scouts have a large selection of trees with prices ranging from $15 to $35, depending on the type and size of the tree.

Lorne Hatt, the Pelham Scoutmaster, said that sales are good this year. "People seem to be buying early," he said. "Dec. 1 was our first day of sales, and we sold over 25 trees." Last year, the troop had 500 trees and were sold out 10 days before Christmas. This year, there are more than 800 trees available.

According to Hatt, "If we still have trees, we'll be selling right up until five o'clock Christmas Eve. But I wouldn't depend on our having too many trees left by then." Trees are available weekdays from 3 to 9 p.m. and weekends from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The selection of trees includes scotch pine, balsam, white pine and blue spruce.

This is a major fundraising event for the two troops, and they depend on the money raised to cover their operating expenses, Hatt said. For instance, the Pelham troop sponsors its members for a one to two week trip to Camp Chesterfield each summer. The money is also used to replace worn out equipment, Hatt said.

"We were able to buy three new tents with some of the money we brought in last year," he said. "This is the biggest fundraising event of the year, and the boys of both troops work hard to make it a success."

In addition to working at the sale, some of the scouts went on the three-hour trip to northern New Hampshire to get the trees.

Despite the hard work, the scouts manage to have fun during this annual event. Darting in and out of a small shed warmed by a wood burning stove, the boys fight to keep warm despite the December chill, Hatt said.

Thirteen-year-old Lorne Hatt of Pelham said, "We have a lot of fun. It's a fundraiser but its also fun. It's a fun fundraiser."

BOG settles down to business; looks to future projects

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors got some work done this semester.

COMMENTARY

As opposed to the internal bickering between partisan members of the board last semester, Chairperson Eric Nakajima and other board members set out to actually work on some of the issues that affect students in the Campus Center Student Union this fall. Their efforts were largely successful.

The board lost many of its hard left and hard right factions this semester, it became more oriented toward the center. People like Jay Festa, Tim Gloster, Chistina Bolton, and Dave Caputo allowed their membership to wane, perhaps because members such as Michael D. Ross were no longer on the board to oppose them. With no battles to fight, they abandoned the board.

With fewer long debates and excursions into parliamentary procedure, the board discussed the issues, worked out compromises, and got things done.

What's also noticeable about the board this semester, however, is what it didn't accomplish, notably the allocation of office space in the complex.

Each September, the BOG takes applications from Registered Student Organizations for office space in the Campus Center and Student Union. The BOG Space Committee then meets and decides who gets what, supposedly based on what each group offers to students.

This year, however, several committee members didn't show up for meetings to allocate the space. Some members did work, but not enough to get the allocations done. As a result, the allocations will not be handed down until mid-March.

For the interim, the board voted Thursday to form an ad-hoc committee to look into allocating space for WMUA. The radio station, with office space in the basement of the Campus Center, is seeking more room for it's business operations, according to Chairperson Scott Lever.

The committee originally proposed that WMUA take the former office space of the Student Center for Research and Advocacy on the fourth floor of the Student Union. Lever and other members of the station balked at this, because of the distance from WMUA's current offices. "What would happen if the phone rang?" Lever said.

During intersession, the new ad-hoc committee formed by the board Thursday will hopefully come up with a solution for WMUA during the break.

Nakajima mentioned three other projects the board will work on during intersession: "The first is taking a look at ways in which we can focus the attention of the campus on the Campus Center."

He said another of these is public-relations related, letting people know what services the complex offers and what issues are facing the campus center.

Third, Nakajima said helping student groups use advertising to let people know what types of events and services are offered in the Campus Center.

Asked what issue he is most proud that the board accomplished this semester Nakajima said, "I think the board has developed as an organization really committed to getting things done." He said more people were now involved in individual projects than in the past semester.

Some of the specific projects Nakajima said are in the works:

- new furniture for student offices
- repainting the fourth floor of the Student Union
- renovation of the music room in the Campus Center
- renovating the commuter lounge

Recognition seen as conflict root

By ELIZABETH CHRISTOPHER
Collegian Correspondent

Resolutions can never be made between the Israelis and Palestinians until they recognize each other as having legitimate causes in their conflict, said the director of the West Bank Data Base Project.

"It is a matter of legitimacy more than anything else," Dr. Meron Benvenisti said at a lecture last week in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

He said each side does not acknowledge the other side's grievances, because it would diminish their own cause; it would mean they are not absolutely right and there is room for compromise. Benvenisti said neither the Palestinians nor the Israelis are ready to compromise.

Because each side only sees its own view, the doctor of public administration and government and ethnic conflicts said the status quo in Israel and the West Bank will continue.

Benvenisti, who has written numerous publications concerning the situation in the West Bank, said the Israeli-Palestinian conflict cannot be resolved by simply dividing up the land.

Each society's identity is embedded in that piece of land, he said. "They are not only fighting for a piece of territory," he said, "it's their total being."

The former city councilor of Jerusalem noted that it is not up to third parties, the United States nor the Soviet Union, to find a solution. "It's the people who decide on war and peace," Benvenisti said.

On hand at the lecture was the program director of Hillel, Yeudit Heller. She supported Benvenisti's view that the coexistence between the Israelis and Palestinians can be achieved only through education. Heller said she felt Benvenisti's visit was important because he is actively trying for a peaceful coexistence.

"If you ask a Palestinian child what a Jew is, he'll say a man wearing green, holding a gun. If you ask a Jewish child what a Palestinian is, he'll say a terrorist. This has got to change," Heller said.

Communication skills conveyed in video hosted by professor

By CHRISTINE MERCIER
Collegian Correspondent

"Good morning, sweetheart," a mother says to her child.

These words mark the beginning of "Talking is Sharing: 1," a 30-minute self-instructional video aimed at busy parents, professionals, and child-care providers who want to communicate effectively with children under the age of five.

The video is hosted by Dr. Rae L. Banigan, a University of Massachusetts communication disorders professor. It is the first in a series of seven films under production by Banigan's company, Talking with Children, Inc., based in Palmer.

Geared toward answering the question, "How can I make the most of my time with my child," the video explains and demonstrates three natural and simple approaches in communicating with children: tune into your child; get your child to tune into you; and target your words.

Banigan guarantees at least one of these methods will work successfully for every child.

In the three months the video has been available to the public, parents and children in schools, hospitals, and research have exercised Banigan's methods with success. "Results are phenomenal," she said.

In a study she conducted, parents and their 14- to 16-month old children participated in two play sessions. After watching the video and implementing its strategies, parents found their children's responses had more than doubled in just 20 minutes, according to the study.

Banigan says in the video, "In my research and work with children and their parents, it's evident that the way your child can have a major effect on your child's overall development." Using the techniques demonstrated in the video, she said she believes parents can improve their child's speaking, listening, and thinking skills, thus overcoming or even preventing communication disorders at an early age.

Marine hostage in Lebanon sentenced to death

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Kidnappers holding US Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins said in a statement released yesterday they have sentenced him to death as a spy for Israel.

"We have issued their revocable sentence to execute this American spy," said the typewritten Arabic statement signed by the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth.

"The spy has been turned over to those responsible for executing this just and revolutionary verdict," said the statement delivered to the Beirut newspaper An-Nahar.

A photocopy of a photograph purporting to show Higgins in a dark sweater was plastered at the bottom of the 15-line statement. Hostage holders in Lebanon usually provede a photograph to authenticate their statements.

Higgins, 43, of Danville, Ky., was head of a 76-man observer group attached to the UN peacekeeping force in south Lebanon when he was kidnapped near the port city of Tyre Feb 17.

"It has been proven by clear cut evidence that he and his American team of observers are guilty of providing the Zionist enemy with accurate and detailed military and security information about our resistance fighters, their positions, movements, supply routes and the quantity and quality of their weaponry," the statement said.

It said the decision to kill Higgins was retaliation for Israeli attacks against "our people in occupied Palestine" and predominantly Shiite south Lebanon.

The statement also said Higgins was sentenced to die in "revenge for the blood of the martyrs of the latest Israeli raid" on a Palestininian guerrilla base nine miles south of Beirut.

Nine guerrillas were killed Friday in the Israeli attack. An Israeli officer also died.

Fifteen foreigners are missing and presumed kidnapped in Lebanon. They are nine Americans, three Britons, one Irishman, one Italian and a Swiss. The longest held is American Terry A. Anderson, 40, chief Middle east correspondent for the Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Higgins, 43, a decorated Vietnam veteran, is married to Marine Maj. Robin Higgins and has a 17-year-old daughter.

He graduated from high school in Louisvile, Ky., and from Miami University of Ohio on ROTC scholarship in 1967. He earned master's degrees in human resources and management at Peperdine University.

Banigan was awarded her doctorate in communication disorders from the University in January of 1987. Besides teaching and presiding over Talking with Children, Inc., she juggles her time between her private speech and language pathology practice and the Wing Medical Center and Hospital in Palmer, where she is a consultant.

"The whole research area is less than 20 years old," said Banigan, who has been in the field for 17 years. As a teacher, she became concerned that students were not receiving enough individual help, and thus, became interested with communication disorders and how they affect families and children's self-images.

Banigan began practicing her techniques with her son, Todd Cole, now 8, before his third birthday. Immediately, she said, she noticed his growth in vocabulary and his improved listening and response skills. Additionally, she said, words began replacing his physical aggressions, the quality of their parent-child relationship strengthened, and his intellectual abilities were enhanced.

Although she has had no prior filming or marketing experience, Banigan has managed to attract buyers for her video on an international scale.

After attending a convention of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association in late November of this year, she said she realized just how needed her video is. Banigan said she believes because the video is the first of its kind (directed toward parents), she has received orders from as far away as Hawaii and Johannesburg, South Africa.

In the second video in her series, Banigan plans to include children and parents in different environmental settings like riding in the car or folding the laundry. She said it will focus on parental word choice in enriching a child's vocabulary.

Asked about how research on the case was conducted, Etheredge said he had spent many hours with Silkoff and Rabinowitz going over the facts of the case.

"I spent a lot of time with Jason and Shari," Etheredge said. "I spoke with them at length about if they even wanted to go through with this."

Rabinowitz said he was concerned that these alleged factual problems would subtact from the main point of the case. "We are basically suing for justice in this case, to protect our civil liberties and those of the students," Rabinowitz said.

Rabinowitz also said an out of court settlement is still possible. "I think it's still possible to settle this thing in-house," he said.

Rabinowitz said several people were talking about the suit being dangerous to student government because it may put student empowerment in jeopardy, Rabinowitz said, "The thing is, there is no student empowerment without civil liberties."

computer quiz system

Shields agrees. "They have to take their own responsibility for their education," he said.

Professors also emphasize the teaching potential of the computer. Shields said that even though five students may be collaborating on a quiz, at least they are forced to work to get the answers," he said.

Wanda, Sue's roommate and a student in Math 128, said she never has to work to get A's on her quizzes. "I've never touched a computer. Sue goes every week and plugs the answers in for me. It's awesome."

"It's not hard - it's just easier to cheat," said Pat, a Math 127 student.

"Sometimes," said Sue, "the community effort becomes ridiculous. Once, when I was waiting for an hour to get a computer, a girl I didn't even know turned around and said she had all the answers if I wanted them. I was done in two minutes."

Students complain that long lines and quiz questions not covered in their texts are also problems with the system.

Cook is aware of this. "There are 22 terminals for 1500 students; this is a major problem," he said. He explains the unfamiliar questions by citing the recent move to standardize texts used in the courses; these questions are probably ". . . remnants that refer to old texts," he said.

Despite these problems, many students said they can get an "easy A," — but they are not learning anything.

"The system emphasizes the grades and not the learning," said Jason, who is taking Math 128. "You are guaranteed an A quiz average because you can retake the quizzes until you get 100 percent, but most people hate it for the fact that you can't get any individual attention."

All the students interviewed said they would prefer discussion sections over the computerized quizzes, where they could get one-on-one attention.

However, Cook said the department offers a drop-in help center for individual attention. It is staffed by undergraduate and graduate student TA's and is open in the afternoon and evening five days a week.

But students say there are drawbacks to the center.

"It's totally useless," said John, who is in Math 127. He complained that the hours conflict with his schedule.

Jason added, "The TA's don't know you personally, and they have no idea how far along you are in your class." He said a discussion section would provide much more personalized attention.

Cook remains positive about the system and its potential.

"I'd like to see all of our elementary classes done this way," he said. "This is only the tip of the iceberg. . . eventually, students should spend 50 percent of their efforts on the machine."

He added, "The important thing is that they come to feel that the computer is a familiar part of their education."

But students feel that the emphasis on the electronic aspects detract from their learning.

"To me, working on the computer is a waste of time. I'm not learning anything; I'm just trying to get the grades," said Pat.

"I know I'd learn more in a discussion section," he said. I'd rather learn from a TA than from a computer any day."

BUDGET CUTS ARE CUTS IN QUALITY

PROTECT the future of the University--YOUR FUTURE

We all can predict what the $5,000,000 cut in the University budget for the Spring semester will mean.

FOR UNDERGRADUATES: Cancelled sections, overcrowded classes, unavailability of required courses, higher fees, longer lines, fewer choices.

FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS: Higher workloads, less support, more years struggling to complete a degree in an institution with dwindling academic resources.

FOR LIBRARIANS: Worsened staff shortages, increasingly significant limitation of resources, including: books, journals, and computer services.

FOR STAFF: Increased workload, as workers leave and are not replaced, less equipment and inadequate materials for all jobs, increased stress levels and related illnesses.

FOR FACULTY: Larger classes, more limited support services, increasingly inadequate working conditions.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts should work to build on this University's past successes, to ensure that this institution continues to value excellence. Instead, these cuts ensure that quality will drop dramatically, as all members of the University community spend considerable energies practicing "damage control."

The Commonwealth's decision to balance its budget on the backs of the state's colleges and universities comes at a time when the state of Massachusetts is:

THIRD in per capita income in the United States
YET IS:
ONE-THIRD BELOW the national average in per capita spending on public higher education
MORE THAN $1000 BELOW the national average in per student expenditure for public higher education

WE URGE YOU TO JOIN WITH US IN THE FIGHT FOR QUALITY PUBLIC EDUCATION. Make it your New Year's Resolution to speak with your parents, colleagues, and neighbors. Let the decision-makers know the facts. Make your position known by calling:

Governor Dukakis	(617) 727-3600
UMass President Knapp	(617) 482-8400
Board of Regents	(617) 727-7785

Legislature:
Senate	(617) 722-1455
House	(617) 722-2000
State House address	State House, Boston, MA 02133

- Tell them what conditions will be like for you with these cuts.
- Remind them of the Commonwealth's basic economic good health.
- Ask them what leadership they will provide in the fight for excellence and equity in public higher education.

Rescheduling of Final Exams on Official Snow Days
Fall 1988

In order to reschedule final examinations in case of snow, two alternate exam periods have been devised. They are 6:30 pm and 8:45 pm each exam day. The use of these alternate periods in the event of closings is outlined below. In addition, the academic calendar includes Friday, December 23 as an official snow day in the event that the University is closed December 22. This policy goes into effect only if the University is officially closed. The snow day "hot line" is 545-3630. If the University is open, all exams are expected to take place as scheduled. Each faculty member should inform his or her class of the planned time and location of the rescheduled final exam in the event of a snow day. All rescheduled exams will be held in the same location as published in the final exam schedule.

It took Galileo 16 years to master the universe. You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

The fundamentals of life

It's Christ's birthday, not a secular holiday

I have ambiguous feelings about Christmas. I like the name, obviously, and the festivities are fun, but celebrating with Santa Claus is like saying a prayer to Snow White.

Rusty Denton

My reading of history (I do read history, folks) finds that the holiday was more or less borrowed from the pagans 300 years after Christ. Roman sun-worshippers held a five-day winter festival called Saturnalia ending on equinox (December 21) to celebrate the birthday of the Sun.

Their traditions are still associated with Christmas — gifts and candles and merriment. A hundred years after the first Christmas observance, many so-called Christians were still confusing Christ with the sun god. Little wonder that the holiday is so easily borrowed back today by people who couldn't care less about Christianity.

It's probably an esoteric question, but I occasionally wonder whether Christmas is celebrated in heaven. There isn't a definitive answer, and we can speculate that heaven itself will seem like one huge holiday, but I doubt that the Christmas season carries much weight in the throne room of God.

If any celestial holidays are observed, the Bible would seem to indicate that they might be the sabbaths and the seven annual observances (plus a few others) prescribed to Moses by God in the Jewish books of the law. The Mosaic law itself was given to instruct people about the holiness and majesty of God, and about His unabated desire to display mercy, and His uncompromising hatred of sin. The law is beautiful, and the holidays outlined in the law are equally reflective of the glory of God.

Since Christianity began as an orthodox Jewish sect, any truly Christian holiday has to have its roots in those traditions. To make a case for observing Christmas, there are three things you need to understand about the law of Moses.

The first is that you can please God on your own merits only if you are sinless, perfectly obeying the 613 laws in the five books of Moses from childhood. The operative word is sinless. The second insight is that if you sin, a life will be required of you — either yours or that of an innocent. Animal sacrifices were prescribed in the Old Testament. The third point is that faith is required to be reconciled with God; in ancient times, faith in God's provision for forgiveness was demonstrated by eating part of the sacrifice.

That brings us to the one legitimate reason for celebrating Christmas. Jesus Christ came claiming to be the Son of God, sent to perfectly fulfill the law, to demonstrate the mighty power of God, and being perfectly innocent, to be killed for the sake of the people. Those who believe He died for their sins are forgiven and reconciled to God. And according to the New Testament, Christ is the only way you can get right with God; you can't earn it.

Christmas honors the beginning of Christ's mission: His birth. That's what I'll be celebrating. Merry Christmas.

Give me a break — and some heat

I don't care what people say during the summer — I was outside yesterday, I felt the bitter cold, the wind chill, my face crack — there is no such thing as the Greenhouse effect.

David R. Mark

This is the time of the year to give, right? I wish the people in charge at Brittany Manor would give us back our heat, which they took away from us, or lost, or something, this past weekend. We were all fine in the apartment until sometime Sunday, when suddenly we realized it was warmer in most of North America than it was in our apartment.

The temperature, as I write this, has now hit about 40 degrees, and it's still falling.

What really stinks about the weather is trying to go to sleep, and even worse is trying to stay asleep. I woke up yesterday morning at about 6 a.m. — wearing two sweatshirts, sweatpants and socks, and under a blanket and a bedspread — and found my teeth chattering. The next four hours, hours I longed to have for sleeping, were four hours of living hell — although hell may have been better. At least it's warm there.

There are other people, however, whom I wish would give at this time of year.

I wish more of my professors would give me a break during the final exams period. I have to give credit where credit is due, some of my professors have given take-home exams, or options on exams to do essays at home instead of essays on the test, but the majority of my classes are giving cumulative exams.

What is the purpose of a cumulative exam if you have never been tested on part of the material before? Nothing like having to study seven chapters of brand new material, on top of 12 chapters of old material, for a two-hour exam where the class has no real clue.

Professors who give ridiculously difficult take-home exams are not doing there students any favors either. These time-consuming monsters are wonderful if you have two weeks to kill, not two minutes, which is about what I have during finals.

The only reason I have time for this column is because of the stupid heat in my apartment waking me up three hours before my first class. This is about the most fun I'm going to have until next Wednesday afternoon, when I can finally relax after my last final, paper, and take-home exam are done.

Well, I hope all of you find it in your hearts to not follow the lead of your professors and landlords and give something to those who have less than you. A little donation to a worthy charity at this, or anytime, of year is the greatest gift you can give.

Happy holidays, Happy New Year, and happy hoping one of us gets warm this week. . .

. . . I was just informed the temperature in my apartment is 37 degrees . . . and still dropping.

Silkoff/Rabinowitz fight should be over

It was Nov. 31. A clear majority had just voted not to ever consider the elections of March 15. It was not really a step forward, or backward, but sideways. At least it was a step. Finally, at long last, the Silkoff/Rabinowitz was a dead issue.

At least that's what the overwhelming majority of senators wanted. And I believe that's what the students want too.

But of course, it was not what Silcroock and Rabinotwit wanted, and as far as they are concernd, that is all that matters. That's why they are attempting to sue the Student Government Association for alleged civil rights violations. That's why they refuse to give up their ridiculous attempts to assume office. How many judicial appeals must they lose? How many times will they divert the senate's attention to their pathetic, egotistical cause? How many more times will they misrepresent themselves as oppressed and suffering martyrs, unjustly wronged by a misguided and prejudiced few? How long will it be until we have finally heard the last from these pretenders to the throne? Even Ferdinand Marcos gave it up after a while.

I was sick and tired of the Silkoff/Rabinowitz issue anyway, and this civil rights suit just gets me angry. At a time when we could finally get things done in the senate chamber, we are faced with getting legal defense (God knows who is going to pay for it) and the possibility of becoming a nonentity. Thanks a lot, Jason and Shari. It's time you thought of something besides yourselves.

UMass police leave us without help after hours

Are students really safe on this campus with the kind of police that patrol it?

I left work at the Collegian on Dec. 9 at 4 a.m. to find that my car was not where I'd left it. I checked all the signs in the lot to make sure I wasn't in a tow zone - not a one.

Amherst Towing had taken my car to spend a night with them, courtesy of the University of Massachusetts police. I called our "magnificent men in blue" to be greeted by "This call is being taped." What the heck does that mean?

Sure, they had my car towed — it was a snow hazard. Now, if you remember, on Dec. 8 the temperature reached over 50 degrees. Unless everything I learned in grade school is wrong, it can't snow at 50 degrees.

I called them back with a simple request: "I'm alone on campus, and I would appreciate a ride to get my car."

"We don't usually provide transportation in these situations. Don't you live on campus?"

"No. . . that's why I need my car."

"Is there someplace you can go on campus?"

"At 4 a.m. in the morning?"

"You can wait for the 6 a.m. bus to get to Amherst Towing, otherwise. . . "

"Otherwise I can walk, right?"

"Oh no, we can escort you anywhere — on campus."

Realizing this was going nowhere, I asked him where I could park so my car would be safe. He told me Lot 22, Lot 25, E Lot, etc. Great. The rape lots. My car's safe but not me.

Jennifer Rooks

Why is it that this University informs us to no end about safety on campus, but when a student tries to protect herself (or himself), no one will do anything? Am I expected to wait two hours in the deserted Campus Center? I might as well walk for the amount of safety I'd have there. I would have taken a room at the hotel, but I needed the money to get my car.

The UMass police don't seem concerned with students at all — neither their safety nor their rights. They have only hassled and inconvenienced us.

To some, the word "police" may have an evil connotation, but to me it is synonymous with protection. Yet now I find that I have to protect myself, lest anyone get off their petoots to help. How many times have you read signs, notices, pamphlets, and advertisements warning you about being alone on campus? (I had only planned to walk 100 feet to my car.) Are these ignored by the same people who seem to be the ones putting them out? But if something had happened to me, I would, without a doubt, have been reminded of them.

Sometimes I think the University has a police department for the sole purpose of snagging students for parking violations — hey, the school needs money, right?

I feel that I've been denied the protection I deserve at a University. I was left alone on campus because of the police, and I felt it only right that they should help me out. If you can't feel safe on campus, someone's not doing their job (which I've already pointed out). What's wrong with doing a bit of what they were hired to do?

DeVito and Schwarzenegger: unlikely Twins

By RAYMOND MARTEN
Collegian Correspondent

Twins
Starring Arnold Schwarzenegger and Danny DeVito
Mountain Farms Cinema

"Only their mother can tell them apart." That's the slogan for this new Ivan Reitman film starring Danny DeVito and Arnold Schwarzenegger as the twins of the title.

About 35 years ago, a group of scientists decided to genetically produce the world's most perfect human male. They mixed a "genetic milkshake" consisting of the genes from six men chosen for specific desirable characterisics. The result was Julian Benedict, a man possessing a perfect body who held peace and logic as the highest of human goals. The side effect was his twin brother, Vincent, a street-smart con artist who steals cars for a living. They were separated at birth and told that their mother died in childbirth.

Julian, played by Schwarzenegger, has lived his whole life on an island — learning and perfecting his physique. When he is told by his mentor that Vincent exists, he immediately decides to find him.

Eventually they find each other and that's when this movie really takes off. DeVito and Schwarzenegger are perfectly cast as the mismatched twins, who, while very different, are very much the same.

There are, however, important differences — aside from the obvious — between these two brothers. Julian is intelligent and honest but hasn't any practical experience in life, whereas Vincent has had more than enough, such as shaming a nun when he was at an orphanage and stealing the library book fund. They discover that only together do they make a complete person.

Most of the jokes in this off-beat comedy work well, and some, such as Julian's first sexual experience, are hilarious. Schwarzenegger, playing a "good-guy" hero who hates violence, has come a long way since his role as Conan the Barbarian. Of course he does get a chance to flex his muscles (that's what we want to see) but he only does it when he has to.

DeVito is equally funny as the slimy little brother who at first wants to exploit Julian's strength and intelligence, but then learns to love him. Vincent is truly enjoyable because he isn't a cruel or evil man; he's just nasty and greedy. He is very much like Louie DePalma, DeVito's character in "Taxi", in fact, with just a little (and it is a very little) more class. With the talent shown by both of these versatile performers, you can bet that they'll be back.

Directions: For the following question, select the best answer choice provided
1. Only if we know human nature can we know the nature of the true good for human beings. And only if we know the nature of the true good for human beings can we arrive at an idea of the truly just society. Thus, if we know human nature and the nature of the good for human beings, we can arrive at an idea of the truly just society.
Which of the following points out a potential flaw in the reasoning above?
(A) What one human being thinks is good might well be something that another human being thinks is not good
(B) Many people have arrived at ideas of the just society, and all of them have been slightly different
(C) It is quite possible to know human nature without in any way being able to know what is the good for human beings
(D) Philosophers have argued for centuries over what specifically defines human nature, without coming to a general agreement
(E) Arriving at an idea of the just society may require more than knowledge of human nature and knowledge of the good for human beings.

1988; a fountain of youth for music

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Yes friends, here it is at last! The DJ's verdict on this year's musical platter, the final word up on '88 vinyl.

It's that time of year again, when Mr Major Label puts out all his crappo "greatest hits" comps of bands he now wishes he hadn't signed, and dupes people into buying them for their brats' Christmas stockings via mucho dodgy advertising on MTV.

But we're not going to fall for it, are we? No, now with the help of my handy, flammable and good enough to eat guide to the grooviest records to grace the stacks this year, you can make sure that your Christmas party is the most fabbo and triffically unpopular of the holiday season. So here goes, in no particular order, for the albums of the year.

Disc Junkie

And what a year it was. Shane McGowan and his drunken rabble we know and love as The Pogues, kicked off the year with their savage, brilliantly desperate If I Should Fall from Grace with God. Nothing I've heard since matches its emotional intensity, except maybe Cave's Tender Prey or the little heard Songs from the Cake Kitchen by Graeme Jeffries.

Around the same time we saw what was to my mind, the best country album of the year, Pontiac, by Texan, Lyle Lovett, whose definitely twisted lyrics are several cuts above the usual "Love's gone and left me" fodder. Almost as good were Randy Travis' Old 8 by 10 and the delightful Little Love Affairs by Nanci Griffith.

Then Spring came, and with it, the weird and wonderful Tenement Year from David Thomas' Beefheart inspired outfit, Pere Ubu. And before the hype there was the Sugarcubes whose eagerly awaited debut, Life's too Good was the cheekiest pop album of the year.

The Jazz scene went acid with Ornette Coleman's sublime Virgin Beauty, and then completely off the wall thanks to two incredibly innovative albums by New York's John Zorn. "The Big Gundown ingeniously reinterprets the work of the greatest film composer that ever lived, Enio Morricone, while Spillane is a hi-tech film noir soundscape, which includes a piece especially written for blues maestro, Albert Collins.

On the rap front there were three "genius moves;" BDP featuring KRS 1, former wordsmith with the late DJ Scott La Rock gave us a plea to "stop the violence" on the By All Means Necessary LP, while the Shakespeares of rap, EPMD produced the biggest selling hip-hop album of all time, Strictly Business. But nothing came close to the mighty Public Enemy who once again came up with the goods on their aptly titled It Takes a Nation of Millions To Hold Us Back.

'!988 in effect saw hip-hop leave the clubs and depart the underground. Its place was taken by the mesmeric beat of the Chicago originated House sound which had by now spread out overseas, gaining great popularity in Europe, particularly the UK. Best of a great bunch was the Pet Shop Boys' resplendent Introspective and Brooklyn acieed God, Todd Terry's To The Batmobile We Go.

But what about that old beast "literate pop," that we had heard so much from last year. Apart from brief appearances in the form of the Go-Betweens, whose album 16 Lovers' Lane was one of the year's major disappointments, and Ed Kuepper's epic "Everybody's Got to, the album the Go-Betweens should have made, he was nowhere to be seen. I guess he must have got scared off by the "Noise Boys," psychotic garage bands like Mudhoney and Lubricated Goat.

While albums by these and other new hardcore acts were excellent, it was once again the past masters who lead the way. As far as rock albums go, the two that stand head and shoulders above the rest. Two Nuns and a Pack Mule by Steve Albini's Rapeman, kicked bigger butt than anything else this year while super Sonic Youth's Daydream Nation was the ultimate trip, and to my mind, overall album of the year.

Well, that's all for this year folks. Meanwhile, I'm off to Winnipeg to check out the burgeoning HM scene. Later.

Phish make big splash at Hampshire concert

By SCOTT NANCE
Collegian Correspondent

Phish
Hampshire College Red Barn
Saturday, Dec. 10

The crowd at the Red Barn caught a big Phish Saturday night. Phish is one of the most powerful, gotta-go-see live bands around. Their shows have a Grateful Dead feel to them, but Phish infuse more jazz, blues, and heavy guitars into the tunes than Garcia and company. The band opened Saturday's show with a jazzy number complete with drummer John Phishman on trombone.

Phish's tunes span a lot of musical territory, some songs running nearly fifteen minutes. Pieces like the instrumental "David Bowie" really stretch out, and the band's musical stylings are felt as much as they are heard. Phish's sound has a familiar quality that makes listening comfortable, while being far out enough to keep you entertained.

Not satisfied with just putting on a rock concert in the traditional sense, Phish pulls out every ounce of power from each tune, making the show a memorable experience; kind of like a good friendly party.

Phish displays superb musicianship on the parts of guitarist/vocalist Trey Anastasio, Page McConnell on keyboards, bassist Mike Gordon and drummer Phishman, making their in-the-sky improvised jams look like a lot of fooling around. This has much to do with the band's whimsical style, with strong songs like "Fee", a number about a love triangle between a weasel, a chimpanzee, and a gospel singer, and "The Tires Are The Things on Your Car That Make Contact With The Road".

As was evidence at the Red Barn, Phish has got the talent to be the next REM, only bigger (and better). The audience's familiarity with the music of this (as of yet) unsigned band really says something. A lot of people are tasting Phish . . . and finding it delicious.

Give Zappa's regards to Broadway

By JASON OKAI
Collegian Correspondent

Broadway the Hard Way
Frank Zappa
Barking Pumpkin Records

Frank Zappa, the master of satire, is at it again with his new album, Broadway the Hard Way, produced on his own label, Barking Pumpkin Records.

Many of Zappa's favorite topics are included in this collection of live performances from his 1988 world tour, such as evangelists, politicians and government corruption.

This collection of completely new material is Zappa's most political album since 1986's Frank Zappa Meets the Mothers of Prevention, which was an attack on the movement to censor song lyrics. Keeping up with the times, he touches on everything from the Bakkers to the Iran/Contra affair.

The evangelist-bashing song, "Jesus Thinks You're a Jerk," is one of the highlights of the album. In Zappa's wisdom and jaded wit he brings out the essence of the PTL scandal and of Pat Robertson's failed presidential campaign. One cannot ignore his masterfully phrased lyrics: "There's an ugly little weasel 'bout three-foot nine/ Face puffed up from cryin' and lyin'/ 'Cause her sweet little hubby's sucking prong part time...Get a clue, little shrew...We need an ark to survive the drool...Jesus thinks you're a jerk."

Some of the other songs on side one aren't as politically oriented as the rest of the LP. "Planet of the Baritone Women" features a longtime friend of Zappa's, Ike Willis, on vocals. Willis has been singing and playing guitar with Zappa since the late Seventies when he appeared on Joe's Garage. Willis uses his deep, penetrating voice to give a bouncy feel to the other selections he sings, "Promiscuous" and "The Untouchables."

"Promiscuous" is a rap-type song that explores the accusation that the AIDS virus was in fact produced by a lab experiment and not the green monkey of Africa. Again the lyrics are the best part of the song. That's not to take anything away from the music, but it's the lyrics that stand out throughout the entire album.

"The Untouchables" features Willis giving a monologue, in the best Elliot Ness voice he could muster, on the Iran/Contra affair while the band plays the theme from the television series of the same name. The criminals in this takeoff of the series are Oliver North, George Bush, Ronald Reagan and the rest of those fun-loving Republicans.

The songs "Rhymin' Man," about Jesse Jackson, and "When the Lie's So Big" are both cleverly written. They are about the lying that goes on in the "slam, bang, live on the razor's edge" world of big-time US politics. These are the expository songs of the album. These songs, written in the way that only Frank Zappa can write, expose the little-known facts about Jackson and something he calls "the Republican trick." "When the lies get so big/ And the fog gets so thick/ And the facts disappear/ The Republican trick... tell me, when will we be rid of these men?"

Through all the political songs emerges a very amusing song that satirizes the rumors that Elvis is alive. Titled "Elvis Has Just Left the Building," the lyrics seem to say it all. "Elvis has just left the building/ Those are his footprints right there/ Elvis has just left the building/ He's up there with Jesus in a big purple chair."

If there is one thing about the music that makes it as good as it is, it would have to be the horn section. This five-man horn band plays extremely well throughout their entire repertoire. On "Rhymin' Man" the section switches tempos like they were changing their socks. Zappa is known for purposely writing difficult music, and this is no exception. One of the songs that was featured on the tour, but is not on the album, is a version of the Led Zeppelin classic "Stairway to Heaven." When "Stairway" was played, the horns would play the lead and the solos. Zappa is also well known for surrounding himself with only the best musicians and, in this horn section, he has found that.

The other musicians who play on the album have all played with Zappa prior to this tour. They include Ed Mann, percussion; Chad Wakerman, drums and Scott Thumes, bass. They have all played with Zappa on the Sheik Yer Bouti album. In keeping with Zappa's high standards for musicianship, these folks are some of the best session musicians in music today.

This is by far the best album of new material that Zappa's produced in years. "No holds barred" lyrics and sensational music put this album on the top of any Zappa fan's Christmas list.

The Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton has three films scheduled for Dec.14-20 and three more scheduled for Dec.21-27. First, Paul Schrader's Patty Hearst, about the 1973 kidnapping and brainwashing of the newspaper heiress, starring Natasha Richardson, daughter of Vanessa Redgrave. Also on hand is a double feature of Roger Sherman's Food Fright, a humorous but educational film dealing with eating disorders, and Diane Garey's Sentimental Women Need Not Apply, about the history of the nursing profession.

Continuing with a culinary theme is Babette's Feast, a Danish film that won this year's Best Foreign Film Oscar. Starring Stephane Audrane, the film is based on a story by Karen Blixen, whose life story was the subject of Sydney Pollack's inept Out of Africa a couple of years ago. This beautiful piece of cinema runs from Dec.21-27. As a holiday treat, the cinema is having a special showing of Robert Zemeckis' Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, starring Bob Hoskins and Christopher Lloyd, who worked with Zemeckis on his previous monster hit, Back to the Future. The film brilliantly meshes live-action footage with a galaxy of cartoon characters including the notorious Roger himself. It has been hailed as a technically revolutionary work and is alot of fun too. Who Framed Roger Rabbit plays from Dec.21-27.

Finally, Robert M. Young's excellent Dominic and Eugene starring Ray Liotta, will also be showing from Dec.21-27. Enjoy.

Second relief plane crashes, seven dead

YEREVAN, USSR (AP) — Official estimates put the death toll from the Armenian earthquake at up to 60,000 yesterday, and hopes waned that any more survivors would be found. A second relief plane crashed near the Armenian capital, killing seven people.

Renewed political trouble broke out. with Armenian activists reported clashes with troops over the arrest of several nationalist leaders.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, after touring the disaster area, accused "provacateurs" of using the consequences of last week's earthquake to create instability and insisted, "They must be stopped."

One Armenian activist who avoided arrest, Raphael Popoyan, said by telephone yesterday that three demonstrations were staged Sunday in the Armenian capital of Yerevan.

He said all were protesting the arrest of leaders of a committee that has spearheaded a drive to annex Nagorno-Karabakh, a predominately Armenian enclave in Azerbaijan. In one demonstration, troops and demonstrators were wounded on both sides, Popoyan said.

An editor at Armenpress, the Armenian news agency, confirmed there was violence at one demonstration but said the incident did not appear serious. The editor, who spoke on condition of anonymity, acknowledged soldiers fired several warning shots to break up the protest. He confirmed that police detained several leaders of the Nagorno-Karabakh Committee on Saturday.

A dozen tanks were parked in Yerevan's central square Sunday night.

Before dawn yesterday, a Yugoslav military plane crashed while trying to land at Yerevan airport with medical supplies - the second crash of a relief plane in as many days. On Sunday, a Soviet military transport plane crashed as it approached the airport at Leninakan, a city hard hit by Wednesday's quake. Seventy-eight people died.

All seven crew members aboard the AN-12 cargo plane died in yesterday's crash, First Deputy Aviation Minster Boris Banyukov said.

Local reporters said the plane crashed at 4 a.m. because the pilot mistook a well-lit highway for a runway.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Geneva-based League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies said in Yerevan there was little hope more survivors would be found in the rubble piled high in several Armenian cities, including Leninakan, near the quake's epicenter, and Spitak, which was virtually wiped out.

Three Van Gogh paintings stolen in the Netherlands

OTTERLO, Netherlands (AP) — Three paintings by Vincent Van Gogh were stolen from a museum late yesterday, including "The Potato Eaters", one of the 19th century Dutch impressionist's most renowned works, Dutch television reported.

It said the alarm at the Kroeller-Mueller national museum in Otterlo went off at about 9 p.m. (3 p.m. EST), apparently because a window had been smashed in the building, and that three Van Gogh works were found to be missing.

It did not say what the other two paintings were.

The museum has one of the largest Van Gogh collections n the world.

A police spokesman in nearby Ede said "one or more paintings" were stolen form the museum, which lies in the heart of the Netherlands' largest national park.

Stories of dodging bullets after foreigners caught in clash

BEJING (AP) — Foreigners caught in a clash between Chinese police and nationalists in Tibet's capital told of diving behind vendors' tables and running down narrow alleys as troops opened fire without warning.

"People were falling and screaming. I saw people carrying wounded Tibetians on their backs, running into their houses and trying to find a place to hide," said Ron Schwartz, a sociology professor at the University of Newfoundland in St. Johns, Canada.

He said he dashed up a street to dodge police bullets and tear gas. "It seemed like an eternity I was running up that street," he said in a telephone interview Sunday with The Associated Press.

The clash broke out Saturday in Lhasa when 30 Tibetians, identified by the official Xinhua News Agency as Buddhist monks and nuns, marched into a market with the banned Tibetian flag to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the UN Declaration [illegible] Human Rights. The protesters, dressed in street clothes and face masks, demanded an end to 38 years of Chinese communist rule over the Himalayan Mountain region.

China said Sunday that a Buddhist monk was killed and 13 people were wounded when police fired at demonstrators. Schwartz said the monk had been carrying Tibet's banned flag.

Police "appeared, marching in a tight formation. They fanned out in an arc, some very close to the monks," said Schwartz. He and other foreign witnesses said the police then opened fire without warning. The nationally televised evening news said police "were forced to fire" when "some troublemakers refused to heed a warning and threw stones and bottles at police."

"The soldiers were running after us. They came so close," said Christa Meindersma of Amsterdam, the Netherlands, who was shot in the left arm.

Americans spend big bucks on X-mas gifts

NEW YORK (AP) — Most Americans intend to spend at least $200 on Christmas gifts this season, and one in four will spend at least $500, a Media General Associated Press poll shows.

Given those expenses, it's not surprising that a vast majority of Americans - 85 percent say they believe Christmas is too commercialized.

Still, a plurality celebrate the holiday as a religious, not just a social, occasion.

The survey of 1,084 adults in the continental United States was conducted by telephone Nov. 10-20.

The poll suggested that Americans remain strongly religious and have deep fondness for the Christmas season. But it also showed significant differences in viewpoints among regions and age groups.

Eighty-nine percent of those answering the poll identified themselves as Catholic or Protestant; the rest were Jewish, "other," or had no religion. Ninety-six percent said they look forward to the Christmas holidays.

About a third thinks of Christmas as mainly a social holiday, and about one-quarter regard it as primarily religious. The largest number - 38 percent - consider it religious and social.

The poll also showed that nearly seven in 10 Americans are churchgoers, and four in 10 had been to church in the week before the poll. Sixty-four percent said they generally go to church on Christmas.

The poll suggested that Americans are in a somewhat more generous mood this holiday season than they were seven years ago, when an AP-NBC News poll showed that 69 percent intended to cut back on spending.

In the new poll, nearly half said they'll spend the same as they have for the last few years; 27 percent will spend more. Only 23 percent said they intend to spend less.

Sixty-nine percent said they intend to give gifts to at least 10 other people, and only 3 percent will be giving to none. Twenty percent will be giving to 20 or more people.

Finally, seven in 10 people say they usually receive gifts they really want; one in four don't.

Plant closings and layoffs cost 10 million jobs in last 5 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 10 million Americans lost their jobs due to plant closings or layoffs from 1983 to 1988 despite the longest peacetime economic expansion in the nation's history, the government reports.

Of 9.7 million displaced workers during the period, 4.7 million were so-called "tenured" workers who had held their jobs for three years or more, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says in the latest of its biennial reports on worker displacement.

That was a slight decline from earlier BLS studies of overlapping five-year periods - 1979-84 and 1981-86 - which both had shown that 5.1 million tenured workers lost their jobs during the respective periods. But each of those periods also included the severe recession of 1981-82.

As a result, government and private economists say the new figures show a persisting displacement problem.

Larry Mishel, an economist for the Economy Policy Institute, a liberal Washington think tank, called the decline in jobs displacement after the recession years "surprisingly small."

The BLS began conducting the displacement surveys in 1984 at the request of the Labor Department's Employment and Training Administration. The latest report was released over the weekend.

While the 1984 and 1986 surveys showed workers coming out of factories, only 40 percent of the tenured workers losing their jobs in 1983-88 had been employed in manufacturing.

In conjunction, the distribution of the layoffs has shifted somewhat from blue-collar occupations such as machine operators, laborers and repairmen during the recession periods to white-collar management and sales occupations from 1983 to 1988.

"This was the lean-and-mean era, when companies went after middle-level managers and other white-collar workers," said Mishel. "But a lot of it, especially in retail trade, is also somewhat related to these leveraged buyouts. It's probably the better-paid retail workers who lost their jobs."

One thing that hasn't changed is the percentage of workers who were given some kind of advance notice before losing their jobs. In all three surveys, roughly six of every 10 displaced workers had been told in advance to "expect a layoff."

But only two of every 10 in the latest survey said they had received a written notice of their impending dismissals.

Study: Black students more likely to be punished

NEW YORK, (AP) – Black students, especially in the South, are far more likely than whites to be targets of corporal punishment or school suspension, according to a study.

"Teachers often overreact to blacks, especially black males. Interestingly, that's true even with black teachers," said Joan McCarty First, executive director of the Boston-based National Coalition of Advocates for Students, which Sunday released an analysis of federal school data.

The report found black youngsters are more than twice as likely to be hit or be labled mentally retarded as whites. And while blacks make up 16 percent of the school population, they comprised only 8 percent of those in gifted student programs.

The findings were based on an analysis of biennial data published by the US Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights in 1986, the latest year available. the coalition study projected the rates at which students of different races suffered various school penalties.

The coalition found that the 10 states with the biggest disparities in the rate of corporal punishment were nearly all southern: Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas, Florida, New Mexico, Ohio, Georgia, Indiana, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

Nationwide, male students account for 80 percent of corporal punishment incidents and 70 percent of suspensions, the study found.

It shed little light, however, on why blacks seem to bear the brunt of school penalties.

Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the National Education Association, called the analysis "disheartening" and said the study indicated that teachers and administrators sometimes respond in a racist manner to certain students.

"We have our own built-in prejudices about the way certain kids can learn, or how they talk, or how they would or dress,' she said. "I don't see a lot of efforts to counter that."

Jane Usdan, a spokeswoman for the American Federation of Teachers, said her union rejected racism as the explanation.

"It's clear that there are problems. Schools aren't reaching the majority of the students we need to reach. Teachers need the flexibility to meet the needs of individuals students," she said.

Fist said the results don't mean blacks and other minority students are breaking school rules more often than whites.

Instead, she said, "teachers tend to react out of their frustration and irritation."

She said few school districts have systematic controls over discipline, such as requiring teachers to document in writing whey a student was referred for discipline. It means students are often punished for trivial offenses, she said.

Among the reports' findings:

Nationwide, 5.22 percent of black students received corporal punishment, compared with only 2.28 percent of white and 2.05 percent of Hispanics.

Arkansas had the biggest statewide disparity of corporal punishment rates: 22.57 percent of blacks received such punishment, compared with 10.99 percent of whites, and 5.64 percent of Hispanics.

Nationwide, 9.07 percent of blacks, 4.44 percent of Hispanics, and 4.05 percent of whites were suspended from school.

The racial imbalance in suspension rates was largest in Ohio: blacks were suspended at a projected 16 percent rate, Hispanics at 9.54 percent, whites at 4.8 percent.

Blacks nationwide were placed in special classes for the "educable mentally retarded," at a 2.3 percent rate, while 0.87 percent of whites and 0.56 percent of Hispanics were similarly lableled.

Alabama exhibited the greatest differences: blacks were lableled "educable mentally retarded" at a 6.13 percent rate compared with 1.99 percent of whites, and 0.79 percent of Hispanics.

has done better and Diane's more of a discus thrower," said LaFreniere.

The 20-pound indoor weight is a relatively new event in indoor track. In their first time competing in the event, Marisseau threw 28'1" and Ozzolek threw 27 feet.

The relay teams showed their strength with the 4x440 relay team winning the event (4:04.7), and qualifying for the New Englands. The 4x880 relay also qualified and finished third (9:39.82). The mile relay started with Vaughan, who handed off to Crocker. Wendy Marshall ran the third leg, and Ambrose ran an even 59-second anchor. "I didn't expect them to win the [4x440] but I expected them to do well," said LaFreniere. About her star quarter-miler, she said, "Lee Ann got two good quarters in and she's only a freshman. She's coming off the preseason, where she worked on endurance. In the midseason, she'll work on speed."

The two-mile relay, oddly enough, consisted of three milers and only one half-miler, the NE qualifier, St. Laurent. Ironically, she ran the slowest time among the four (2:30.35). LaVallee led off, followed by St. Laurent, and Smith in the third leg. Hill ran a 2:20.14 anchor leg to finish the day. "I think it was tough for the relay to come back after establishing PR's [personal bests]," said LaFreniere.

"Overall, the women looked very good. The freshmen did really well and we got some outstanding individual performances. People are starting to take notice of us now," said LaFreniere.

UMass to its fifth straight win, a 72-71 victory over the University of New Hampshire.

The senior co-captain leads the 5-0 Minutewomen in scoring with 80 points, for a 16.0 per game average. She also leads the team in free throw percentage (22-30, .733) and assists (26).

Hoop-la: UMass is still looking to match the all-time best start, which was set when the 1978-79 Minutewomen ran off to a 6-0 start under coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. However, they won't get a chance to do that for a couple of weeks. Their next action isn't until Dec. 28, when they face the University of Maine in the Bath Ironworks Classic in Portland, ME. . . The latest start is impressive, but it isn't the best for first-year coach Kathy Hewelt, who says she had some better in her days as coach of Indiana Tech.

"I'm not sure how many it was," Hewelt said of her best streak. "I think 9-0, maybe." . . . Although the Minutewomen do not get into conference play until Jan. 3 (at Rhode Island), a few teams have already gotten into their Atlantic 10 schedules.

Traditional front-runners Rutgers, St. Joseph's and Penn State are all out of the blocks, winning their first. Rutgers and St. Joe's each beat Duquesne, while Penn State dumped St. Bonaventure.

However, UMass is the only conference team with an unbeaten overall mark. West Virginia (5-1), Rutgers (3-1), and St. Joe's (2-1) all have just one setback. But only the Minutewomen remain perfect so far.

New faces look to spark Minutewomen

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Last year's University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team waited until the ice began to melt to hit the season's high note. In the year's final competition, the Minutewomen tallied a school record 177.90 points at the Atlantic 10 competition, good for a surprising fifth place finish.

This winter, according to first year coach Alfie Mitchell, UMass could rewrite that record before the first good snowfall.

"177.90 is a good score," said Mitchell, "it's good to end on a good note. But this team is more than capable of scoring over 180. We hope to bust through 180 very quickly, and build on that."

Mitchell brings an enthusiastic attitude from his most recent coaching role at Ball State, and is hoping to inspire a crop of promising fresh faces and returning veterans into a post-season calibre campaign. No less than six freshmen have made the roster, joining traditional high-scorers Kristin Turmail, Erika Baxter, Lynne Morris, Laurie Kaufman, and others on an optimistic squad.

"In a sense, this is a totally new team," said Mitchell. "Whoever has seen us in the past, when they look at us this year, they're going to see a totally different team. There's a lot of new faces, a couple who are coming back from injuries last year, and the girls that were here last year and were good they're even better."

Turmail, who holds school scoring records in both the balance beam and vault exercises, is back from an appearance in last year's post season regional competition, where she finished third overall. By executing more difficult routines, Turmail intends to take her show national this spring, while claiming the three remaining records that have remained just outside her grasp."

"She's going for NCAA nationals," said her new coach. "She's capable of doing it. All around, her difficulty, style and the way her routine has been flowing (through this fall's practices) are what it takes to make the nationals."

Baxter is also planning on attempting more difficult routines this fall. Baxter has, in the eyes of her coach, improved most dramatically in her uneven bars routine, a sore spot for the entire squad last season. Junior Lynn Morris, whose floor routine was described by Mitchell as "a pleasure," should see action in balance beam and floor exercise competition as well.

On top of the freshman heap is Kim Grady, described by Mitchell as an explosive talent. "What Kristin Turmail has done in the past," he said, "Kim Grady is capable of accomplishing the same. All she need is the experience." Classmates Erin Klier, Debbie Schultz, Elma Lagandyk, Julie Kantaros and vault specialist Michelle Demeo have been greeted with high hopes from their fellow rookie coach as well.

Injuries have robbed the team of both leadership and experience, however. Junior team captain Enya Hlozik is out indefinitely with a dislocated elbow, and sophomore Tracey Bubas is awaiting word on the seriousness of knee injury suffered this weekend. "It's a big setback not having them," said Mitchell.

Neither is expected to return, for sure, before the season's first competition January 14 at Navy. Between then and the Atlantic 10 tournament in mid-March, the Minutewomen can look forward to dates with Yale, A-10 foes University of Rhode Island and Rutgers, and a February 11 showdown with rival University of New Hampshire. "We want to kill them," said Hlozik of the scholarship-rich Wildcats.

Within the Atlantic 10 conference, powerhouses Penn State and West Virginia leave title hopes in douht for UMass. But strong league performances would result in the Minutewomen receiving a high ranking in the region, and an at-large invitation to post-season action.

"To do well at the Atlantic 10s would be to place third . . . to be in the top four would be a big step for this program," said Mitchell.

Which doesn't mean that coach and players alike don't have high hopes for what they can accomplish this season. "We've improved unbelievably," said Hlozik. "We should do really well, we'll break several team records over the season."

"They will surprise a lot of people this year," agreed Mitchell of his troops. "Our goal is to go to the post-season regional meet. They are physically capable right now of getting there. Emotionally . . . that will be the big key. They have to come together as a unit, and be able to weather a storm.

"If you go by past impression, people respect this program, but they don't fear it. What we want to try to do is make people fear us because we're capable of beating them. Then our opponents will make mistakes."

Four runners pace men's track

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team participated in the Harvard Invitational Meet Saturday at Harvard. For the second meet in a row no team scores were kept.

"The fact that no team scores are kept is good," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "It prevents coaches from putting kids in three or four events which leads to injury this early in the year.

"We had a good day. There was marked improvement across the board over last week's performance."

Among those cited by O'Brien as having strong days were Joe Lochiatto, Derek Moore, Steve Brown and Art Smith. Lochiatto qualified for the finals in the hurdles with a time of 7.6. In the finals, he placed seventh with a time of 7.9.

The fact that he responded as well as he did as a freshman is a good sign," said O'Brien.

Moore finished fourth in the 1,000 meters at 2:30.1. What impressed O'Brien was the quality of Moore's competition.

"It [the 1,000 meters] was a loaded field. He moved his way through the pack with the poise of a veteran," O'Brien said.

Brown ran the 400 meters and finished seventh, less than one second off the winning time. O'Brien was pleased with the result as Brown improved his time from last week.

Smith entered the 3,000-meter race and came up with his best time ever, 8:20.9. That mark was good for a fourth-place finish.

"I'm impressed more with how we competed against stiff competition that the fact that we improved our times," said O'Brien.

He was also impressed with the debut of Jerome Bledsoe. Fresh off a long football season, Bledsoe competed in the long jump and scored 22-feet-8½ inches, good for fourth place.

"He's an added bonus to the team with his athleticism," said O'Brien. "His consistency was what surprised me. He's only been working with us for two weeks."

If there was one thing that could stand improvement, O'Brien said its the emotion of some team members.

"I'm disappointed with our veteran players. They weren't as excited as some of out younger kids," O'Brien said. "It's too early to get complacent. I'm going to work on enthusiasm with the older group."

UMass is idle until January 14 when it participates in the Yale Invitational meet.

Minutewomen qualify for NEs

The University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team qualified four individuals and two relay teams to the New Englands with an excellent performance at the Harvard Invitational last Saturday.

In addition, three freshmen, Precious Hill, Laura LaVallee, and Michelle St. Laurent, ran their personal best times. Hill ran a 4:37.5 in the 1500 and finished third. LaVallee, in the same event, ran a 4:53.6 and finished 11. St. Laurent ran a 2:20.6 in the 800. All three qualified for the New Englands. Amy St. Pierre, who flip-flopped with Kristen Peers in the 3000, was the first qualifier of the day at 5000 meters with a finishing time of 18:42.2.

The 1500 was the most successful event for UMass, which placed three athletes among the top 11. Hill and LaVallee ran personal bests and sandwiched between them was Shana Smith.

Lee Ann Ambrose qualified with a 58.2 quarter-mile for second place and finished just two-tenths of a second behind the winner.

In the half-mile, St. Laurent ran her personal best, but the other two finishers ran what UMass coach Julie LaFreniere called disappointing times. According LaFreniere, Sonja Vaughan has to start applying herself more and Cathy Crocker is injured and working with a doctor right now.

The 3000-meter race was botched due to official's error and LaFreniere estimated Peers' time to be approxiamately 10:32. LaFreniere said the error occurred when the lap judge miscounted and thus Peers was under the impression that she had one left to go instead of actually two.

In the shot put, UMass had Simone Marisseau (36'1'), Helen Balaouras (34'2'), and Diane Ozzolek (26'2'). "I think that everyone in the shot did very well. Simone is a sophomore and she was just shy of qualifying [for the New Englands]. Helen Zullo, a 5-foot-4 guard from Somerset, N.J., set a personal career high when she scored 32 points in leading the Minutewomen to an 80-69 win over Holy Cross on Wednesday.

Then Zullo scored 14 points, including the game's winning points on a three-point play with 34 seconds remaining, in leading

Regents move ahead on budget cutting plan

By YANA DLUGY
and the Associated Press

BOSTON — The Board of Regents of Higher Education moved ahead yesterday with a budget trimming plan which will increase class size and reduce enrollment at the University of Massachusetts, along with the rest of the state's 28 colleges and universities.

"There will be some reduction in the quality of education. Hopefully it will not be significant," said Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer, the state's top higher education official.

At the same time, the regents, in an 8-3 vote, approved a budget for next year that calls for a 9 percent increase. One of the opponents, Regent Joseph Henson, called the $882 million budget proposal for the fiscal year beginning next July 1, "totally at odds with the economic reality we are living with now."

> "There will be some reduction in the quality of education. Hopefully it will not be significant."
> — Chancellor for Higher Education Franklyn Jenifer

For the current fiscal year, the regents took steps to complete Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' order to all state departments to trim their spending by 3 percent. The cuts will cost the higher education system about $20 million, according to the regents' figures.

"It may be that there will be fewer students attending school next year," said Regents Chairman Edward Lashman. "But we will always maintain diversity and quality."

Jenifer said that as a result of the spending cuts, class size will increase, some students who need to take a particular course to graduate may find that course unavailable, student fees will increase, the number of part-time faculty will be reduced and schools may be ordered to reduce admissions.

President of the Holyoke Community College David M. Bartley already closed admissions at his school for next semester.

Because a number of students in the state higher education system are often from low-income families, it is unlikely they would be able to attend college elsewhere if they are denied admission into the state system, said Terry Zoulas, a spokesman for the board.

The regents had no estimate of how many students might be denied an education because of the budget cuts. But the Massachusetts Teachers Association, which represents most of the 8,000 faculty members in the higher education system, distributed estimates that at least 3,000 students would be denied admission in the next semester alone as a result of the cuts.

The state higher education system contains 100,000 full-and-part-time students.

"Higher education really has a skim-milk budget; there is no fat," said the MTA's James Rice, president of the Massachusetts Community College Council.

However, President of the UMass Graduate Student Senate Gida van Heerden had a suggestion for the Board of Trustees as to how to trim the extra fat off the school's budget.

"We suggest that the Board of Trustees cut one of the few layers of fat left by getting rid of the President's Office," van Heerden read off a GSS press release. "This extra layer of bureaucracy does little else but eat up $2 million annually of our trust fund interest, from which it is entirely funded," she said.

At the packed regents meeting yesterday afternoon, Regent Henson said the budget cut for this year "is not the end of the world." He called on the board's staff to provide college presidents with "sensitivity training" in convincing them to ask for budgets that were within the state's means.

"I would like to see Regent Henson do some sensitivity training with one of the students who does not get into school," responded Arlyn Diamond, a faculty member at UMass.

The cuts required this year by Dukakis are part of $163 million in cuts or spending reversions that the governor hopes will offset a budget deficit estimated at about $636 million.

Students rally against S. Africa on SU steps

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

More than 250 University of Massachusetts students signed postcards yesterday urging United States senators to support economic sanctions against the South African system of Apartheid.

Despite freezing temperatures, students attended a rally on the Student Union steps where tables with prepared postcards addressed to Massachusetts Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry. The cards, which were available for signatures, urged the senators to support a comprehensive sanctions bill pending in the Senate. The bill has already been passed by the House of Representatives.

Steve Duplisea, chairperson of the Young Communist League, said the bill requires the US Federal Government to withdraw investments in South African corporations, with the exception of uranium and plutonium manufacturers.

Student Senator Brian Darling said sanctions work against South African blacks by putting them out of jobs.

"The only thing sanctions help to create," he said, "is a bloody revolution in which both sides will be hurt and the cause of freedom will be hurt."

Darling said jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela "was arrested in possession of bombs. I think he's a terrorist. He didn't renounce the use of violence and I don't believe in using violence to make change."

Sekhulumi Ntsoaole, who spoke at the rally, is a student from Lesotho, a small country bordering South Africa. Ntsoaole said US sanctions do not pose a threat to South African blacks.

"The notion that says sanctions will affect the black government, states, or the black people of South Africa more than the whites is pure lie and illusion," he said.

Apartheid is the South African policy of racial segregation under President Pieter W. Botha. The system limits political, economic and social opportunity for blacks. Blacks and persons of mixed racial descent compose 75 percent of the nation's population, while whites compose 18 percent.

Ntsoaole said that under Apartheid "people's whole lives are governed by classification at birth, based on combinations of skin color, physical appearance, language groups and descent. The system decides what kind of work will be open to them and whether they are to be accorded such rights as voting. It decides where they must live, whose schools or hospitals they may attend, what transport they must use and whose people they may marry."

Sponsors of the rally included the Commuter Area Government, University Democrats, the Organization for Marxist Study, the Third World Caucus, the Central American Solidarity Association, the Young Communist League, the Office of Third World Affairs, the Palestine Solidarity Committee and the Radical Student Union.

Students need ways to cope with stress

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

With Christmas just around the corner and finals approaching, many students are feeling the effects of stress more acutely than at any other time in the semester.

Bruce Taub-Bynum, a clinical psychologist at Mental Health Services at the University of Massachusetts, said the most stressful time of year starts two weeks before Thanksgiving and continues until the week after New Year's day.

For students, exams only add to the stresses caused by increased family activity, money problems, remembering loved ones who are absent and other dilemmas that creep up during the holiday season, he said.

"They feel out of control, they feel events are going to overwhelm them," Taub-Bynum said.

Stress has many symptoms including a lack of concentration, sleeplessness, irritability, the feeling that events are racing out of control and "free-floating anxiety." These are common complaints of students seeking treatment, he said.

"A lot of times people spend six hours in front of a book and only study for half-an-hour," the psychologist said.

One way that Taub-Bynum and his associates at MHS help students handle the pressures they experience is

For some, Christmas brings on depression

One of the major reasons Americans stress out during the holiday season is 94 percent of us do not fulfill our self expectations, says University of Massachusetts psychologist Warren Schumacher.

"If you look at the statistics on households in this country today," Schumacher said, "you'll see that only 5.7 percent look like the Norman Rockwell family. You know — with a mother and a father and children; one breadwinner, who's male, and mom staying home cooking — turkey."

Proposed position at SAO could impede SGA budget

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The $2 million Student Government Association budget for fiscal year 1990, passed by the Undergraduate Student Senate two weeks ago, still faces some hurdles before it can be forwarded to the Board of Trustees in January for final approval.

The first of these changes involves funding for an eighth professional staff position in the Student Activities Office which is not included in the current budget.

"We really need someone to pay some more attention to just problem-solving in the office and take over some of the routine personnel matters," said Irene Carew, director of SAO.

Carew said she is hopeful this position will be funded through negotiation with the SGA Budgets Committee and the SAO Council.

However Jessica Mitchell, Budgets Committee chairperson, said seven positions in SAO are currently funded from the Student Activities Trust Fund and an eighth will not be funded for FY '90.

"At this point in time the Budgets Committee does not feel [SAO] demonstrated a need for an eighth position," Mitchell said.

"I sat down with [Carew] and gave some very good reasons why we couldn't fund that position."

Brian Crawford, assistant to the Budgets Committee, said funding for a graduate student assistant position had been given to SAO. He added an additional consideration in not funding the eighth position was that projections indicate student enrollment will decrease, which could mean less work for SAO.

Also, Crawford said, the Office of Third World Affairs had lost a professional staff member several years ago when the budget was in the red.

"We chose to give the Office of Third World Affairs the position before we funded any new ones," said Crawford.

Carew said the position is essential for the efficient functioning of the office. She said currently, she and other members of the office are doing clerical work.

"I think it's really necessary if we're going to get organized in here and use the time of our professional staff better," Carew said.

According to Mitchell, Carew has no "veto power" over the budget, but Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson does.

Full costing

The other problem area for the budget is in a charge called "full costing."

Full costing, according to Assistant Budget Director Bob Jenal, is a percentage fee charged to groups who use trust funds at the University.

The fee is charged, Jenal said, to cover staff and processing costs incurred from handling trust fund monies. The unused portion of this money is returned to the SATF. This is called the "full costing recharge."

Jenal said the full costing fee charged from the SATF for FY '90 will be 3.75 percent, up from 2.9 percent for the current fiscal year.

The problem is that the 2.9 percent number has already been used, resulting in an underestimate of the full costing charge for the coming year. The full costing charge now on the budget is $116,000 (2.9 percent of $4 million). The .85 percent increase represents $34,000 or a $150,000 total full costing charge.

However, Mitchell and Crawford said the full costing recharge will cover the increase. They said the recharge has been underestimated for FY '90, and there will be a lower amount returned to the SATF, but the budget will not run in the red.

Crawford and Mitchell say, however, the charge is unfair.

"I don't think it's a fair charge. I think it's the University's way of handling budget troubles," Crawford said. "I believe there is a cost in processing, but I don't think it should be that high." Crawford said one or two percent would be a fairer amount.

Carew also said the charge is something that deserves examination.

"That full costing really hurts," Carew said. "Right now we have to look at what that extra money is going for . . . It's certainly an area of investigation."

She said, however, it was a necessary charge. "It goes to support any special positions that support the SATF . . . We need people in accounting to process our paperworks."

SAO Business Manager Steve Sullivan agreed that the fee is jusitfied. "We couldn't duplicate the services provided for what we pay," Sullivan said.

Carew said she had no other complaints about the budget, and sees no problems with it being passed on to the Trustees.

"I think generally they did a pretty good job," she said.

Crawford, too, said he saw no problems with the budget ??the next couple of weeks we'll be putting out a justification booklet explaining how we funded each group, and elaborately explaining how we funded each agency."

More than $635,000 of the trust fund is given to Registered Student Organizations to fund their activities. This funding is decided on by the budgets committee based on what services the groups offer.

Crawford said no groups had complained about their funding. "Nothing's gotten back to us about people being unpleased," he said.

Mitchell also said she had received no complaints from groups who felt they were underfunded.

Rally against cuts today

Senators plan protest for noon

A rally to protest budget cuts to the University of Massachusetts is scheduled for noon today on the Student Union Steps. The rally is being organized by members of the graduate and undergraduate senates.

"This is just the first step in mobilizing students to fight the budget cuts," said Kevin Dodson, treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate. "We've had four cuts in two years . . . It's going to take a lot."

Dodson said if it is too cold or snowing, the rally will be held in the Student Union Ballroom.

"We're not aiming at the Trustees with this rally, we're aiming for the governor and the state legislature," he said.

Dodson said the cuts would reduce paid teaching assistant positions for graduates, prevent the hiring of new faculty, resulting in weaker departments, and prevent the purchase of supplies and class materials.

He said he expected Massachusetts Society of Professors and the Association of State and Municipal Employees to have representatives at the rally.

Controversy cripples senate this fall, Silkoff/Rabinowitz dominates SGA agenda

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

What moves and moves and never gets anywhere?

The Undergraduate Student Senate.

Yes, the joke is lame, but it's accurate. Each week dozens of proposals are on the senate agenda, and most of them are never even heard because of battles between liberal and conservative members of the senate.

COMMENTARY

The senate spent most of its meeting time this semester debating the Shari Silkoff/Jason Rabinowitz co-presidency issue. Many senators offered solutions, but the only one which worked was a proposal by Sen. John Dunlap, endorsed by prominent senators on both sides, which simply says the senate may not vote on the question.

This move passed overwhelmingly because it pacified both sides. It allowed the senate to not make a statement on the problem, thereby not alienating senators on either side of the issue.

This proposal also clarified the senate bylaws to say that only one person can run for the office in the future. If this would have been done in the first place, a lot of trouble could have been avoided.

After this move, which had the endorsement of senators on both the left and right, the senate actually started to get rolling. The budget was passed fairly easily, and more importantly, the senate seemed to have gained a spirit of cooperation.

Now the civil rights suit by Silkoff and Rabinowitz threatens to cause further problems for the senate. What's interesting is that the suit may unite the senate against Silkoff and Rabinowitz, although many agree with their right to sue.

Other action

So, what else did the senate do this semester?

Well, it condemned the proposed hockey arena. And then it supported the hockey arena.

This was an interesting issue, because some conservative senators tried to portray those opposed to the arena as anti-sports.

"What, you don't like sports?" they asked, as if this was like a bill banning oxygen.

This was a major oversimplification, because the fee that would be imposed as a result of the arena is what the senators opposed to the arena were fighting.

Like many other issues, the hockey arena precipitated a rally, organized by Sen. Guy Glodis to kick off his presidential campaign. When I stopped by there were all of about 10 people at the rally.

Pizza delivery person stabbed in Baker hall

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

A pizza delivery person delivering an order to Baker Residence Hall reported to police Friday he had been assaulted by an individual wielding a pair of scissors.

The delivery man injured his ankle as he fled from his attacker down a flight of stairs. The victim furnished University police with a description of the assailant and completed an Identikit composite before being transported to Cooley Dickenson Hospital where he was treated for minor injuries.

Police are continuing the investigation with the help of witnesses.

In other police reports:

- A money clip with $70 was reported stolen from a room in James Residence Hall Friday.
- A louver worth $200 on a rear window of a car was reported stolen Friday from a car in Lot 22.
- A hooded sweatshirt worth $40 was reported stolen Saturday from the laundry room in John Adams Residence Hall.
- Police reported Saturday a vehicle parked on Fearing Street was pushed downhill and into another vehicle. Damage was estimated at $500.
- A large plate glass window on the second floor of Patterson Residence Hall was reported broken when an unknown object was thrown through it Saturday.

Campaigns

Speaking of presidential campaigns, conservatives and moderates began to figure out how they can beat the liberals in a meeting party at Sen. Greg Rothman's apartment Friday.

The meeting was largely to decide how conservatives and moderates can work together without splitting the vote thereby allowing a liberal victory, as happened last semester.

Trading barbs

Back to the senate floor, which often saw some rude stuff.

Rothman's Twinkie stunt three weeks ago was one of these. He and other conservative members of the senate brought boxes of Twinkies to the meeting and started passing them out.

The reason for the Twinkies stemmed from a vigil for Harvey Milk held the night before. Milk, a homosexual city council member in San Francisco, was murdered, allegedly in part for his sexual preferences.

The defense used by the killer was that he had eaten too much junk food, such as Twinkies, and this had made him mentally unstable. This was allegedly why he killed.

Rothman, Sen. Matthew Whiting, and Sen. Brian Darling, among others, apparently brought the Twinkies to mock the vigil.

Of course, Rothman claimed ignorance. "What a coincidence!" he said, smiling.

The conservatives would say they are offended by homosexuals. This stunt, however, was tasteless, (pardon the pun), and offended many.

It's things like this that make the senate look foolish. All senators seem to have plenty of personal conviction, but often this keeps them from being able to work together. As many senators have said this semester, the students they represent are the ones hurt.

■ holiday blues

The remaining 94.3 percent majority, some of which are among those in the fast disappearing "typical" family units, often set ourselves up for disappointment at the holidays, he said.

"We expect things to be different," Schumacher said. "We hope against hope that they will be different. And then, when they fail to match that ideal fantasy, we become very dissatisfied and unhappy."

Schumacher teaches in the Division of Home Economics, and much of his research has to do with "locus of control" — where people place the power in their lives.

"There are some people who say 'I ought to be able to make it happen,'" Schumacher said. "They're internals, because they have a perception that they're in charge of their own fate."

They work hard, they're type A personalities, they're perfectionists; and they get low back pain, insomnia, colitis, high blood pressure and migraine headaches, he said.

"At the other end of the continuum — these are bipolar opposites — are the people who perceive that what really controls their life is luck, powerful others, and the system. Their answer to the question 'Can I make a difference?' is 'If I'm lucky; if my lottery ticket wins; if I'm in the right place at the right time,'" Schumacher said.

It is in the gaps between perception and reality at both ends of the scale that many of our problems take root, the psychologist said.

Prescription for holiday enjoyment? He recommended bringing our perceptions into accord with reality, appreciating "the limited nature of this human process called family."

through stress management counselling, and teaching relaxation techniques such as deep breathing exercises, he said. In more severe cases, biofeedback and hypnosis are used. Biofeedback is a technique in which a person attempts to consciously regulate a body function thought to be involuntary.

"In half the cases," he said, "the counselling and relaxation are enough."

Other advice given to students is eating at least "one full, round meal a day," cutting back on nicotine and caffeine, getting plenty of sleep, and doing regular aerobic exercise, the psychologist said.

Taub-Bynum said drugs such as alcohol, when abused, can cause short term memory loss and interfere with concentration.

He would not comment on the use of marijuana because it's illegal.

He said a good way of studying is the reward system. "If you can give yourself three hours of real studying. Then you can give yourself two hours of real fun," he said.

"It's better than five hours of lackluster study," he said.

He said the reward should be something that is actually accomplishable, something that is close at hand like going to a movie or swimming. "The more physical the better," he said.

Rita Hirsch, coordinator of the peer health promotion program at University Health Services, gives workshops to peer counselors who then go out to residence halls and advise students on how to handle stress.

Hirsch advised students "to not panic, to organize your time and to break down big tasks into smaller ones," and to make a daily list of what needs to be done.

She said finding a quiet, uncluttered space to study and budgeting time for relaxation and exercise is important.

Also Hirsch said realizing a "particular paper is not the do-all or end-all in your life" is a good way to minimize the amount of stress generated by the project.

In order to avoid stress, Taub-Bynum said to "look back over your life over the last year and realize what is really important and choose better what to get uptight about. Most things we get uptight about are ultimately not that important."

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

EWC and Greek Area develop new programs

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

Stereotypes surrounding the Greek area and the Everywoman's Center have ironically helped build trust between the two groups as they work to develop programming specifically tailored to the Greek area.

Debra Valkenaar, assistant director of Greek Affairs and an educator/advocate for EWC, said recognizing stereotypes has actually been an effective tool in building common ground.

"We must be able to take that similarity and translate it in a way that lets us work together," she said.

Valkenaar said in the past the Eveywoman's Center has provided the same educational programming used in residence halls.

Stacy Roth, the director of the Educator/Advocate program at the Everywoman's Center, said "I think the step we are trying to take now . . . with the Greek area specifically, is to recognize that it has a certain uniqueness to it within the university community." "There may be situations that arise in the Greek area that don't arise in other parts of campus," she added.

"Part of the reason we've chosen to work in such a close collaboration with the Greek affairs office and with individual members of the Greek area," Roth said, "is because we can be a lot more sensitive to their specific needs and also design programs that relate to issues relevant to their lives."

"You don't just say that something's wrong with the situation and that we're not communicating right," Valkenaar said. "You give tools toward better communication and identify the areas that need changing."

There have been examples of national education efforts about violence against women in fraternity and sorority chapters across the country, Valkenaar said, but because the Greek area is very stereotyped, their actions are not always taken as sincere.

Lamda Chi Alpha fraternity and Alpha Gamma Delta sorority developed and cosponsered a program called Double Vision, which is a workshop that deals with a number of issues, including alcohol abuse and its effect on social interaction and sexual assault, she said.

"Students of other Greek houses have used these workshops in their own educational programs," Valkenaar said.

Last fall, the Panhellenic Council, made up of the sorority chapter presidents, a representative from each chapter, and the executive board, decided to do a workshop on the connection between alcohol abuse and date rape.

The council worked with peer alcohol educators, peer sexuality educators, and the Everywoman's Center to devise the program, which Valkenaar said "was quite successful."

Roth said in the future the Educator/Advocate program and the Greek area may combine efforts with the UMass Public Safety Office, Residence Halls, the Health Peer Education program, and other areas of the EWC to develop specialized programs for the entire university community.

These programs would address violence against women through a relevant poster series, and a possible role-play or informal theater group, Roth said.

An active type of theater or role-playing production could be effective because it gets people directly involved, she said.

"If we can do programs that are generally dealing with the issue of violence against women, it is also important that we be as creative as possible," Roth said. "It helps to maintain intrest and get larger audiences - it helps in a variety of ways that make our programs more effective."

"We've gotten a fair amount of interest so far," Roth said. "We're trying to be more creative as we go along."

Experts warn consumers of liquid diet dangers

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

A liquid diet may have helped Oprah Winfrey to shed 67 unwanted pounds, but according to nutrition experts, this method of weight loss can be ineffective and dangerous.

Vicki Zak, a research and health care writer who studied obesity for five years in Boston clinics, said, "liquid diets can leave you fatter than when you started, because they cause you to lose lean muscle tissue instead of fat."

Loss of lean muscle tissue drops metabolism by 15 to 30 percent, Zak said, decreasing the body's ability to burn calories, and causing rapid weight gain as soon as regular food is consumed. Dr. Nancy Cohen, a professor of Food, Science and Nutrition at the University of Massachusetts, said drastic methods of weight reduction can lead to the "yo-yo syndrome," repeated rapid weight loss and gain, which causes heart problems.

A liquid diet consists of a powdered substance, fortified with nutrients, usually mixed with water or milk, which is then substituted for food.

Roxanne Kapitan, a nutritionist and director of Nutriwork, a nutrition education program in Boston, said, "Liquid diets are safe only under a doctor's supervision and only for a short period of time. People have died from subsisting on liquid diets."

When liquid diets were first marketed about 10 years ago Kapitan said, they lacked necessary potassium, which caused some dieters to have heart attacks. Certain nutrients may still be missing in some products, she added.

Most dieters could substitute one meal a day and be safe, but ingesting only the liquid diet product could cause serious health disorders, she said.

Zak said, "Formula diets starve you of carbohydrates - your brain food. The formula diets cause you to lose lean muscle tissue, which protects vital organs like the heart."

"When you lose weight on such a drastic program, you do such damage to your psyche as well as to your body," she added. 'Most people who have obesity have emotional and behavioral problems related to food."

"People who have obesity are ostracized by a world of others in the first place because of their obesity," she said. "To go on a program that ostracizes them from food is like an added form of punishment."

"These types of diets," Cohen said, "can give the false hope that this will somehow solve all your problems, when it's likely that you will gain all of the weight back."

Cohen said although liquid diets have been improved, "there's still the chance that you could end up with a screwy batch that has no vitamin B or other vital nutrient."

In addition, Cohen said, liquid diets provide a severely limited number of calories, and "it's hard to say how any individual will react to any restricted diet."

Because of these varying reactions, Cohen and Kapitan said, people should never put themselves on a liquid diet without first consulting a doctor.

In spite of their dangers and ineffectiveness, Cohen said liquid diets remain popular because "people want something easy and magical. This is easy because it takes away all choice."

Post-Abortion Support Group helps women cope

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Keeping abortion a secret can be painful, said a facilitator of a local Post-Abortion Support Group, but because women can not be certain of other people's reactions they keep silent, denying their emotions.

To provide an environment for women to deal with their full range of feelings about abortion, Sarah Buttenwieser, Riva Levine, and the previous director of the Everywoman's Center, Becky Lockwood, developed a Post-Abortion Support Group at the University of Massachusetts.

Levine and Buttenwieser both have experience counseling women who have had abortions, and said they see the group as an extension of that work.

Buttenwieser said the group was designed last year to give women a chance to break their own silences, find support from each other and try to fit it in to the context of their lives.

A woman can feel vulnerable while going through any crisis, Levine said, but with an abortion it's harder to get support.

"A lot of women feel very isolated after their abortions," she said. "It's a big secret." If something else had happened that they could have talked about, they had have gotten a lot of support and sympathy, Levine said.

"It's scary to talk about because you don't know how people are going to react," Levine said. "You don't know if someone's going to call you a murderer or acknowledge that you've made a really hard choice."

For many women, the Post-Abortion Support Group is their first opportunity to talk openly about their feelings, Levine said.

Women talk about anger, grieving, loss, sexuality, politics, birth control, safer sex, and self-esteem, Levine said. "We gear it toward what the women in the group want," she said.

Buttenwieser added, "Women talk about how other people in their lives reacted. People they felt like they could tell — people they felt like they couldn't tell."

Some women talk about why they did or didn't use birth control, others talk about feeling betrayed when their birth control method failed, she said.

"Women are already suffering enough having gone through such a hard experience. We want to do everything we can to make it a little bit better," Buttenwieser said.

"A lot of the motivation for doing this kind of group," she said, "is that women can feel empowered my making a hard choice and getting through it.

"Part of what is so poignant about this decision is that for some women it's the most life changing decision they've ever made," she said.

"It's like the fork in the road, whatever choice you make, you can never take the other choice. You can never know what the other way looks like," Buttenwieser said.

"It's the kind of experience that can be a catalyst for a lot of growth and a lot of self-exploration," she said. "It can make you take a long hard look at your life — where you are, and where you want to go."

"We think people who come into this group are incredibly courageous. And we come in with the understanding that this is not an issue that is easy for a lot of people to talk about," Buttenwieser said.

"People come into this group with very different experiences," she said. "In the past we've had women ranging from 18 to 30 — from many different socio-economic backgrounds."

Having gone through the group, Buttenwieser said, "People who felt like they couldn't tell anybody begin to be able to talk about it." Some women have gone on to become active in the pro-choice fight, she said.

Levine and Buttenwieser have run two groups through the Everywoman's Center already and will offer a third in February. Women who want to talk to a counselor or who are interested in the group should contact EWC.

Silkoff, Rabinowitz tell their side of lawsuit story

When we first approached the American Civil Liberties Union for thier help in getting some justice in our case, the first thing they asked was, "Why did you wait so long to talk to us?"

COMMENTARY

That was a pretty obvious question to ask. After all, it had been eight months since our landslide election, and we were still bieng denied the right to take office. But there was a very good reason why we waited so long to seek outside help. We wanted to settle the issue on campus, within the boundaries of the Student Government Association. We felt that since we were right, and since we could demonstrate considerable support for our cause on campus, it was only a matter of time before we would be placed in office and the controversy would end. Therefore, we faithfully tried every avenue available to us within the student government.

Unfortunately, it became clear to us that no matter how many great arguments we present and no matter how many thousands of students show their support for us, the student judiciary would no lift their injunction, and the senate, in respect of that injunction, would not allow us to hold office. The judiciary continues to hold that, even though they admit the SGA constitution is "vague and ambiguous" on the question of co-presidents, we and all the students of this campus are retroactively responsible, to their interpretation. Yet they have never given any explanation as to how they arrived at that interpretation. That decision was not based on the facts of the case, but on a political bias, either on the part of the judges or on the part of those exerting undue influence upon them, (particularly Bill collins, the "unbiased" Student Attorney General turned Minuteman editor-in-chief.)

The irresponsible actions of the judiciary have torn apart the student government for a year. They have resulted in a denial of not only our civil rights, but the the civil rights of all the students of UMass, particularly the 1,454 who voted for us. They have also helped to set a dangerous precedent — that a small band of extreme right wing activists, organized in the right way, can overturn the democratic vote of an entire community. Legal coups d'etat can happen in America.

Already, this has happened elsewhere. At UCLA, right-wing activists were able to remove a Latino student who was elected campus president, from office on a legal technicality. How long before this sort of activity spills over from student government to local, state, and national levels? Do we allow them to succeed us in subverting democracy here at UMass and continue on their way, or do we fight to show them they can't get away with this?

We choose the latter, and it is for that reason that we pursue this case. We do it reluctantly, after weeks of intense soulsearching and consideration, because we feel it is the only thing to do. We seek an injunction from the court, removing all restraints placed on the senate by the judiciary, keeping them from placing us in office. Legally, if we win this, there is nothing stopping the senate from putting us in office. Whether that will actually happen remains to be seen. However, just the precedent of a court decision in our favor would be quite a victory for democratic principles.

Some have said that our suit hurts student empowerment. We don't agree. We believe that student empowerment means, first of all, the power to elect their own leaders. If student empowerment means a really strong student government caught in a stranglehold by a small minority of conservative extremists, then we want no part of it. Our fight is about student empowerment, and it is for the students and their rights that we pursue this case.

This fight belongs to everybody on campus; indeed everyone who believes in democratic and civil rights. We invite you to show your support at our hearing this Friday, Dec. 16, at 2 p.m. in the Northampton Courthouse on Main Street. Together, we can win.

Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff are the SGA co-presidents elect

Arafat offers three-point Middle East peace plan

GENEVA (AP) — Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat yesterday offered a three-point peace plan calling for negotiations with Israel at an international peace conference, and UN supervision of Israeli-occupied territories.

In a long-awaited speech to a special session of the UN General Assembly, Arafat referred specifically to Israel several times and directly appealed to Israeli leaders to join peace talks.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said Arafat failed to meet conditions for opening a dialogue with the United States because his speech did not clearly recognize Israel's right to exist.

The speech contained some "interesting and positive developments," Redman said, but "continued to be ambiguous on key issues" - including recognition of Israel, renunciation of terrorism and acceptance of UN Resolutions 242 and 338.

US policy prohibits diplomatic contacts with the PLO until it accepts Israel's right to exist. Redman said the United States was simply responding to requests from "third parties" - he did not identify them - on "specifics" of the American conditions for a dialogue.

These are: Explicit recognition of Israel's right to exist, acceptance of 1967 and 1973 UN Security Council resolutions upholding the right of all states to live within secure borders and renunciation of terrorism.

Redman said the speech contained "interesting and positive" aspects, but there were "problems with all three" US requirements for a substantive dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The spokesman specified the "overall tone" as positive and said there was "some movement" by Arafat on the two resolutions. Redman did not elaborate.

Medical problem takes back seat to doctor's assumption

I was infuriated by the way I was treated at the University Health Services recently. I feel that the doctor who treated me was highly unethical and extremely condescending. But wait — let me give you a brief summary of my experience at Health Services.

Meredith O'Brien

A few weeks ago, I was planning to attend a function sponsored by a residential area government. Before boarding one of the many busses provided to transport the students to the event, I attended a small get-together, where I shared two drinks with a friend.

We boarded a bus about a half hour later. (Many of the students on my bus, as well as the other buses had been drinking heavily.) I must admit that at this point, I was at fault. I had forgotten that I suffer from motion sickness and have a weak stomach. I should have had the foresight to realize that having alcohol and boarding a bus was just asking for trouble, but I didn't.

When we got to the function I had become extremely ill. On another bus, two students also became violently sick. (These students had split a bottle of whisky.) The three of us were taken to a nearby hospital under the assumption that we were all drunk.

The medics at this hospital were surprised to find my blood alcohol content was low, compared to that of the two students brought in with me. When I told them that I suffered from motion sickness, then they understood why I had become so sick. Alcohol was a factor in my condition, not the cause.

Two of us were transferred to the UMASS Infirmary for the night. A doctor came into my room to take my blood pressure and to look at my record from the previous hospital. This doctor then began to harass me. He asked if I had attended the same huge party as the two other students attended. I told him that I hadn't, but he didn't believe me saying, "Yeah, right." I told him of my numerous stomach problems to which he responded, "I know that you think you're in here because of motion sickness, but you're not. You're drunk."

The next morning my greeting was, "Do you have a hangover?" I replied that I simply felt queasy. He shook his head and began in a discerning tone, that I could have been arrested for what I did. He practically called me an alcoholic.

The way that this doctor treated me was wrong. I was assumed to be drunk because the two students that I was brought in with were drunk. Is this the kind of medical care that we're paying for? Aren't doctors supposed to show compassion and concern looking at each case individually? The University Health Services should provide the students with the best care they can. We don't doctors with the bedside manner of Mr. Hyde.

America has two battles to fight

I have been angered and saddened to hear news accounts of homeless people dying on the streets of our biggest cities.

In one case, a man in San Francisco was carried out of fast food establishment and left on the street where he died. More recently, homeless in Boston and New York have frozen to death.

This should not happen in one of the richest nations on the planet. I won't quibble about whether the aid should come from the government or the private arena. All that is important is the fact that we could as a society eliminate this situation.

The more I thought about this the more I saw how many problems our nation must face. The very lifeblood of our nation is being sucked out by other nations, as well as the huge corporations who are taking jobs out of small town America and moving them to other countries for profit, not survival.

Just as space called us to reach for the moon and the stars in the 1960's, the 1990's should be a more introverted time. We must look at our own home and stop homelessness. We should stop Japan from developing the VCR while we develop B-1 bombers.

Just as we reached the moon, we can shelter our own citizens.

Professors can create or destroy enthusiasm

For about a year now, I have held a grudge against a professor who said he had no time for me. I went to see him during his office hours for help in his class and he just about turned me away. He was too busy for me.

It wasn't as if he said to me, "I'm really sorry, but I'm very busy. Could you please come back tomorrow?" That, I would have completely understood.

To me, his attitude was more like this: I'm busy, and I will always be busy. I just cannot afford to waste time on you — ever.

I was discouraged and furious when I left his office. It wasn't just that I was having a tough time in his class and he was unavailable to help me that upset me so much. I looked at it in macro terms. Here I was, being educated at a university where my professors cared more about their projects and research than me.

I found myself holding a grudge against my professors. I preached to my friends about how screwed up the priorities were in a university system. There was too much pressure on professors to do research and write books, rather than teach students. Every time I saw a faculty member walk by me I'd want to approach him or her and say, "If it weren't for me, you wouldn't have a job. I'm a student. You're here for me!"

Bob Bobala

But I now admit that I may have become a bit irrational over an incident with one professor. That professor may have been having a bad day when I went to see him at his office (maybe even I was having a bad day). And although he didn't appear very available to me throughout the rest of the semester, maybe it was because he was just having a bad semester.

"But why?" you ask. "Why such a change of heart? Why a renewed faith in the education you're getting?"

There are two reasons — two teachers that I've had this semester. Notice, I have called them teachers because that's what they are. They teach. They want to teach. They like to teach. And they are good at it.

I'm amazed at how much of their time these two people have given me. I've never had to feel guilty about asking for extra help. They always seem to be there for me. They are there for me so much that I wonder if they have a life beyond helping students.

The greatest thrill of my academic life was when one of me professors called me at my dorm. My first reaction was to wonder what he was doing calling me. Didn't he understand that I was a student and he was a professor? Wasn't I supposed to track him down when I needed to see him? However, this feeling of astonishment wore away as his calls became a regular occurrence.

The best part about the relationship I have with each of the teachers I've mentioned is that we are friends. I didn't think it was possible to be friends with a professor until this semester. It's much easier to write a paper for your friend than for someone who acts as if he has absolutely no interest in you at all.

So, as the semester comes to a close, I have a renewed faith in the education I'm getting. Thanks guys. I owe it to you.

SEATTLE, Dec. 12 — As six Western states prepare to celebrate their centennials in 1989 and 1990, official historians are having much more trouble telling the story of how the West was won than they did the first time around.

The state governments, aware that American Indian groups have been critical of how they are portrayed in many history texts, are trying to include more of the Indian perspective in the commemorative histories and events scheduled for the next two years.

What's the matter with me?

All I want for Christmas is my classes

This was going to be the semester that it would happen, I told myself. No ifs, ands or buts about it, I'd finally do it this time around.

I'd finally get a class in my major.

It was a simple request. I only thought it fair that I get a class that would help me in my chosen field. No problem.

Right. No problem. I only wish.

Every year it's the same thing. Upon receiving my pre-registration form, I'd carefully go through the course book (do all these classes really exist?) and sign up for as many as possible. Then I'd sit home, cross my fingers and surround myself with rabbit's feet, beads, charms and other items.

Well, not really. But I may be forced to try it soon.

Regardless, my careful planning always goes for naught. As most students do, I plot my course schedule out, making sure to schedule nothing before 9 a.m. so as to maximize my sleeping hours. But in the end that matter becomes moot.

I really thought this semester would be different, since I was entering my junior year. I had been frustrated in previous semesters, unable to get into the classes I wanted (tell me there is an alternative to a schedule with four sciences). But now, people assured me, I would have seniority.

Jim Clark

Going on that, I was optimistic as I eagerly awaited my course schedule to arrive in the mail this summer (I should have known better than to wait 'eagerly,' given the mail service, but we won't get into that right now). When it came, I opened it to reveal the contents inside. Much to my dismay, the news was nothing new to me.

Two classes, none in my major. Thank God for seniority.

So I'm still batting 1.000. This was the fifth semester in as many tries that I made a day out of camping out in add-drop lines, scrambling to fill out my schedule.

But thus is the story of my life. I seemed destined to follow the lead of those before me. There is the legend of a former Collegian news editor who went into his final year needing several classes to graduate, and could not get any. No way, no how.

The situation doesn't appear to be any brighter. Thanks to our wonderful governor (you really thought he'd be a good president?), we now have a skeleton for an education budget, meaning that all of the classes which I couldn't even get into before are now being wiped out of existence. It's not fair, but it seems inevitable. And it's not just me. This gesture of good will from the state will hurt everyone in the long run. Believe it.

I would like to remain optimistic. I would like to think that maybe, with at least three semesters remaining (who knows how many more it may take at this rate), I could eventually make a dent in my education. But I don't know. I'll just have to see.

In the meantime, if anyone has any good luck charms I can borrow over intersession, I sure would appreciate it.

The Golden Glow

Tempted to head for indoor tanning salons to prepare the bod for the golden glow? If so, at least be informed with the facts about "The darker side of indoor tanning."

What is Tanning?

Tanning is your body's response that occures when your skin is exposed to ultraviolet radiation (UV), as from the sun. Just how much you tan depends on your own skin's natural ability to tan. If you naturally have o dark complexion, for example, you may tan more easily than a light-skinned person, who may burn rather than tan.

In the tanning process, changes other than skin color occur beneath the surface of the skin. Over the years, these changes may lead to o wrinkled, leathery apperance called "premature skin aging" and to skin cancer. Each time your skin is forced to darken itself, your chances of developing skn cancer later in life are increased. Other factors, including your skin's sensitivity to UV radiation, also affect your chances of developing skin cancer. It is true that a tan blocks out some radiation in attempting to protect the skin from further injury, but it is inadequate protection against skin cancer and premature skin aging.

Is Tanning by Sunlamps Different From Tanning by the Sun?

Yes. To explain the difference, you need to have some understanding of "ultraviolet radiation," found naturally in sunlight, which cause you to tan or burn. There are two types of UV radiation that you are exposed to–ultraviolet A ("UVA") and ultraviolet B ("UVB"). UVA radiation is 1000 times less effective in causing burns than UVB. UVA radiation penetrates skin more deeply and causes you to tan or burn much more slowly. A small amount of UVB radiation can cause skin damage.

Most sunlamps give off either mostly UVA or UVB radiation. Some of the newer so-called "UVA" sunlamps give off as much as 10 times more UVA than you receive from the sun and from the older "UVB" sunlamps. Because the amount of UVB radiation (the quick burning rays) in these newer models may be less than what you get from the sun or older UVB sunlamps, users sometimes believe that UVA sunlamps are safe to use.

Is Exposure From UVA Sunlamps Safe?

While skin and eye burns are less likely to occur with UVA exposure than with sunlight and UVB sunlamps, recent animal studies indicate that UVA radiation in high dosages may increase your chances of developing skin cancer and may cause premature aging. That's not all. Other recent animal studies also suggest that you may be more likely to get skin cancer if you tan in the sun AND with sunlamps than if you are exposed to the sun only.

What are the Hazards of Tanning?

Skin Cancer

The risk of skin concer increases each time your skin is exposed to UV radiation. Although most cases of skin cancers are treatable through surgical or chemical removal, they cause serious problems if not treated in the early stage. Another concern is that the number of skin cancers is on the rise.

Burns

Skin burns, more quickly caused by UVB the UVA radiation, can range from a slight redness of the skin to painful blisters. Severe eye burns, causing a sandy or gritty sensation (photokeratitis) or pink eyes (conjuctivitis), may occur within hours of sun lamp exposure if the eyes are not protected by special goggles that fit snuggly around the eyes.

Photosensitivity

Certain chemicals in foods, medicines, and cosmetics you use may cause you to be extra sensitive to UV radiation. This is called "photosensitivity." Your body may react as if you had an allergic reaction. Symptoms are severe skin burn, itching and scaly skin, and rash.

Some common photosensitizing products are limes, celery, and some deodorant soaps, shampoos and makeup. Some of the photosensitizing medicines are birth control pills, antibiotics, anticonvulsants, high blood pressure medications, diuretics, antihistamines, tranquilizers, and oral diabetes medications.

Cataracts

This condition is a "clouding" in the lens of the eyes that usually develops later in life and may lead to blindness. The risk of cataracts can be increased by both UVA and UVB radiation exposure to the unprotected eye. Wearing goggles that screen UV radiation can prevent this.

Premature Skin Aging

One of the most noticable signs of repeated UV exposure over the years is premature skin aging. According to some skin specialists, skin that has dry, wrinkled, leathery appearance early in middle age can result from UV exposure that took place before the age of 20.

Blood Vessel Damage and Reduced Immunity

UVA and UVB radiation also can damage the blood vessels in a sublayer of your skin. UVA affects the the immune system(the body's natural oblity to fight infections). In some cases, it may be harmful. UVB suppresses some immune responses.

Who is at High Risk for Damage from UV Radiation?

Generally speaking, individuals who have red or blond hair and blue eyes, are fair-skinned, have freckles and sunburn easily are of the highest risk for skin damage. One rule to remember, if you burn and won't tan in sunlight, you probably won't tan using suntamps.

If you choose to tan with indoor devices in spite of the risks:

- Always wear goggles that come with the tanning device. If you ore in a commercial tanning salon, request them from the salon operator. Make sure they fit snugly around your eyes and are not cracked. Don't rely on closing your eyes and don't substitute sunglasses or cotton wads.
- Learn your skin type and exposure limits as listed in the exposure directions.
- Be sure someone is nearby to help in an emergency.

SIGNS OF INJURY

- Seek immediate, professional medical attention for severe burns, eye burns, and allergic-type reactions.
- Report serious injuries to the manufacturer of the device and to the nearest Food and Drug Administration District Office.
- See o doctor if you see an unusual skin lesion or sore.

Holiday Fire Safety on Campus:

Taking Care of Each Other

This year is the 46th anniversary of the Coconut Grove nightclub fire in Boston, which killed 492 persons; the 8th anniversary of the MGM Grand Hotel fire in Las Vegas, which killed 85 persons; and the 11th anniversary of the Providence College dormitory fire in Providence, Rhode Island, which killed 10 students. The high combustible decoration content in all these facilities and the smoke thereby produced were the major reasons for the high number of fatalities suffered in the fires.

In 1975, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts enacted into law a comprehensive regulation governing the use of flammable decorations in state and public buildings, especially during the holiday season.

This statute is section 21 of the State Fire Prevention Regulations. It prohibits, in part, the use of combustible paper and plastic decorations, natural Christmas trees, wreaths and trimmings on our campus.

The University does allow decorations labeled "fire resistive." Also permitted are candles as long as they are covered by o glass shield, kept away from combustibles, and extinguished prior to leaving the room. Lighting sets should be Underwriter Laboratory approved, and any extension cords utilized for temporary power should be of heavy-duty nature with no fraying. Take care nat to overload electrical circuits. Artificial Christmas trees labeled "fire resistive" or "slow burning" olso con be used.

Anyone desiring more specific information on holiday fire safety can refer to chapter 13 in University Fire Safety Manual, or contact Environmental and Safety at 5-2682. EH&S can analyze decorative materials in our laboratory to determine flammabilitiy.

I hope you will join with me in assuring that the University community will take the necessary precautions to prevent the holiday season from becoming less than an enjoyable occasion for all.

Thank you for your cooperation, and have a fire-safe holiday season.

Holiday Stuffing is for the Birds

Robin Levine
UHS Clinical Nutritionist

Remember the good old days, you know, when we all sat around on the floor, or on the reclining couches in togas and sandals and stuffed our faces with all the food and drink we could! Some of us even ate to the point that the only relief from that feeling of being overstuffed was to vomit. Relieved of the fullness, we often began all over again. Great times! Great food! Too bad so many of us were dying before age 40. Too bad the empire collapsed and those days are gone. But are they?...

Skipping the togas, sandals and sitting on the floor routine, (it would be a little chilly here in New England for that behavior!), we might find this orgy attitude not all that ancient or necessarily Roman. In the name of "holiday spirit and good will" most Americans indulge in excessive food and drink. Some of us experience discomfort with relief possibly spelled A-N-T-A-C-I-D. Others of us might have a worsening of an already painful eating disorder or tragedy in the form of a drunk driving accident. In between, there are failed weight loss attempts, perpetuation of elevated cholestorol levels, increased blood pressure, poor diabetes control, lethargy, guilt and o decline in, or absence of, an overall sense of well-being.

Are we having fun yet? All of our fitness obsessions, all of our health-conscious resolves, seem to be put on the back burner. "Well, it's just for the holidays." Or, "I'll start taking care of myself after the holidays." Well-meaning sentiments for sure; but, the "holidays" may begin the weekend before Thanksgiving (depending on how early you "book" from campus before the official UMass holiday starts) to February when official "holidays", "post-holiday-blues-cheer-us-up-parties", and semester break "vacations in the land of coconut milk drinks on the beach", are over.

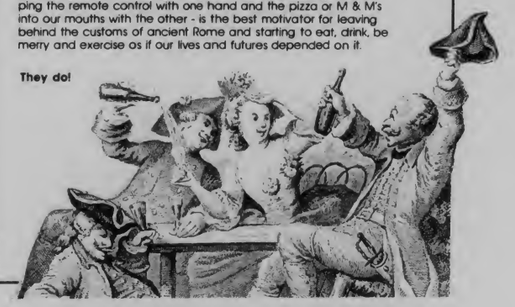
And so, the "holidays" account for 1/4 of the year. This, however, doesn't include birthdays (our own, our sisters, our roommates, our friend's friends), all-you-can-eat buffets, TGIF and Hump Day celebrations. By then, it's Spring break week and "Health" and "Fitness" resume their warm spot on the back burner.

For those who want out of this ever downward spirol of excess and decadence a la "Roman Empire", the following suggestions are offered:

- Avoid "starving" yourselt or using other drastic weight loss methods for hours, days or weeks before the party season begins. This usually backfires and you do more than your share of overeating on the rebound.
- At o buffet, survey the entire selection before filling your plate.
- Carefully think about what your favorite foods are ot this time of year and plan to include them within moderation. Those that you can do without don't eat. (Potato chips, M & M's, and cheese are avoilable year round.)
- Eat slowly; chew the food well, savoring the flavors of the food you selected; make it last!
- Get involved in conversations; keep your back to the food. You are there to enjoy the company, not just the food.
- Slice fruit or berries in a bowl and top with o dollop of ice cream instead of having a whole bowl of ice cream.
- Drink skim or 1% milk instead of whole milk. Use it in cooking, too. Buy low fat instead of full fat cheese. For example, try part skim mozzarella instead of mozzarella made from whole milk.
- Try substituting non-fat yogurt for sour cream in many recipes or try o mixture of the two. This is especially good in dips. Try the dip with raw vegetables instead of chips.
- Choose lean meat rather than hot dogs, bologna, sausage, and other fatty meats. Use fish, poultry, and cooked dried peas and beans (such as kidney beans, lentils, chickpeas, soybeans, split peas).
- Because acceptance of food is a sign of approval and affection in our culture, think of ways to let those you care about know you love them even though you do not wont to eat what they have prepared.
- When drinking alcoholic beverages, for lower calories, choose lite beer, white wine over red, scotch or whiskey without mixers. Also stretch your drinks with lots of ice or club soda. Alternate alcoholic with non-alcoholic beverages.
- Instead of bringing wine, o cake, or cookies as a present to someone's house, bring a plant, a candle, some fruit, or an attractive tray of raw vegetables with a dip.
- Walk to the party, or park your car a little farther away from where you are going to help you put a little extro "exercise" into your holiday season. (Same goes for those big parking lots while you're doing your holiday shopping.)
- Program exercise into the festivities. Suggest walks as o way to visit with relatives as opposed to sitting at the kitchen table over coffee and cake.

Thinking about haw we'll look in 20 years if we keep living this way–gorging at holidays, guzzling beer every Friday night, flipping the remote control with one hand and the pizza or M & M's into our mouths with the other - is the best motivator for leaving behind the customs of ancient Rome and starting to eat, drink, be merry and exercise as if our lives and futures depended on it.

They do!



The Gift of Diversity

Beginning in early November we're bombarded with Christmas decorations and Christmas music and it's easy to forget that holidays from several religious and cultural traditions are celebrated at this time of year. It's also easy to forget that for many people Christmas means more than popular carols and shopping.

Lots of people complain about the pressures and stress of this season. For some it's a question of not enough money or not enough time. For others there's a heightened awareness of family pressures. For people who celebrate o holiday other than Christmas there's frequently a feeling of exclusion, of their traditions being devalued.

In many American families there is a blending of cultures. If an awareness of the varied ancestral traditions has been kept alive, the family will have a rich, complex identity. But frequently this awareness is lost with the passage of time or in the process of resolving conflicts and adapting to the surrounding community. In this case holiday observations might seem homogenized rather than reflective of the family's complexity and diversity.

A gift you can give yourself, your family, and your friends is the gift of awareness; understanding the meaning of the holidays you and other people celebrate; connecting with people around the richness of tradition and ritual.

Here are some questions to ask yourself and to ask friends and neighbors:

- What holiday does your family celebrate?
- If several cultures merge in your family, how does this affect holiday observation?
- Are there special religious observations? Family rituals? Foods?
- How were holidays celebrated in your family fifty years ago? One hundred years ago? To answer this question you might want to draw a family tree. How far back can you trace your family? Where do branches originate? When did they come to the United States? Why? Who in your family can you talk with to learn the family stories?
- Think about your friends, both current and from childhood. What do you know about their holiday observations? In what ways are their traditions different or similar to yours?
- Are there traditions or rituals you'd like to revive? Something new to introduce?

Choose one or more of these questions to explore with yourself, with your family, or with friends. Learning about your own and other's heritages is an important part of figuring out who you are, who you want to be, and how you can connect to the larger world. Learning about diverse traditions will help you re-focus from the commercial aspects of this sometimes harried and stressful season onto something of more lasting value.

Attorney general names special prosecuter to check claims of racism by assistant D.A.

BOSTON (AP) — Attorney General James Shannon has named a special prosecutor to investigate allegations that court officers shoved an assistant attorney general because he is black.

Shannon's decision marked a reversal of his position since October, when he accepted a report saying the scuffle was not racially motivated.

On Monday, Shannon appointed William F. Lee, a partner in the Boston law firm of Hale & Dorr, as a special assistant district attorney to conduct the investigation.

He will look into allegations by Thomas Brewer, an assistant attorney general in the Medicaid fraud unit and president of the Massachusetts Black Lawyers Association.

Brewer said two court officers pushed him as he left the spectators' section of Judge Sandra Hamlin's courtroom in the Suffolk Superior Courthouse on Aug. 24.

Brewer said the court officers later told him that they had thought he was a defendant.

After the allegations first arose, Shannon turned the matter over to court officials to investigate. In October, Shannon accepted the conclusions of Ms. Hamlin and Gregory R. Baler, an associate executive secretary to the chief justice of the Superior Court, that the incident was not racially motivated and no sanctions should be placed against the officers.

Representatives of black, Hispanic, Asian-American and women's bar groups later charged that Hamlin and Baler failed to interview all witnesses. The groups also criticized Shannon for not conducting his own investigation.

Brewer said the conclusions of the court investigation contradicted statements made to him and to a bar group by Ms. Hamlin and Henry Barr, executive secretary to the chief administrative justice.

Mary Breslauer, a spokeswoman for Shannon, said the attorney general decided to name an outside investigator because Brewer is an assistant attorney general.

Officials say bad driving is hurting Hub business

BOSTON (AP) — Public and private officials say Boston motorists' notoriously bad habits are driving some businesses away, prompting a $1 million advertising campaign designed to steer traffic in a more orderly direction.

"We've finally faced up to the fact that we can't just make jokes about the city's traffic," said Joseph C.K. Breiteneicher, president of Beacon Management Co.

The 3-year campaign, "Keep Boston Moving," is sponsored by the city, state, Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority and businesses.

Efforts to eliminate double-parking and blocking of intersections will be communicated through newspaper, radio, television and billboard advertisements. The campaign also will encourage the use of mass transportation and car pools.

Xmas singles:then and now

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Burl Ives "Silver And Gold"- Contrary to popular belief, the beloved singer of this tune is not a talking snowman. Although he is probably best known to the younger set as the narrator of the yearly broadcasted Rudolf The Red Nosed Reindeer, he was also quite a star in his day. His distinctive vocals add a homey touch to this capitalist's Christmas delight. It can be found on various Ives records and the hard to find soundtrack of the special.

Bruce Springsteen "Santa Claus Is Coming To Town" - This popular Christmas remake can be found on the B-side of Bruce's "My Home Town" single. Although he's no Burl Ives, he manages to get through the song adding his own element of fun to what could be the usual boring rock star Christmas song. Special recognition goes out to saxophonist Clarence Clemons, who turns out a sparkling performance adding the perfect touch to the song.

The Partridge Family "Walking In A Winter Wonderland"- Admit it, you watched the Partridge family when you were younger (or perhaps even recently). Where else could you here all of those groovy new songs and "unique" classics? As the years have passed, the horribly mismatched voices of Shirley Jones and David Cassidy miraculously sound much improved. The breezy, mellow early-seventies style pop along with the very important background vocals from the rest of the prefabricated family makes this carol a yuletide classic.

Alvin and the Chipmunks "Jingle Bells"- Leave it to these irritating rodents to ruin the simplistic favorite "Jingle Bells." With a voice quality that can only be enjoyed if the listener is on acid, the chipmunks rush through the classic with their usual shrill and their obnoxious manager/trainer Dave barking orders at them throughout. Shouldn't chipmunks be hibernating in December?

Band Aid "Do They Know It's Christmas?"- The first major rock charity effort of the decade that spawned numerous imitations still stands alone. Recorded in 1984, at the height of the second British invasion, Band Aid boosts some major talent. Among the all star line up are Paul Young, Boy George, George Micheal, Simon Lebon, Bono, Bananarama and Sting. The song is a poignant and touching look at the plight of the suffering Ethiopians. Everything about the single is top notch, it was touching to see what one man could bring about.

Bing Crosby "White Christmas"/Johnny Mathis "Silver Bells"- Some songs just exemplify Christmas and these two definitely qualify for that position. Bing Crosby's version of the Irving Berlin hit "White Christmas" is the best selling world-wide record of all time. His smooth, tranquil voice was a favorite of his generation and has earned him fans of all ages. The next generation of smooth swooner can be found in Johnny Mathis, who found fame in the early sixties. His "Silver Bells" reads like a modern anthem to the holidays and has yet to go out of style.

Madonna "Santa Baby"- From last year's A Very Special Christmas album, Maddy shows just how materialistic she can be. Remaking the fifties version of the tune with only a few changes, Madonna gives her best Marylin Monroe imitation and the result is an enjoyable romp with a traditional material girl. Her little girl voice and the slight orchestration gives an authentic feel to this delightful single.

Joan Jett "Little Drummer Boy"- An unlikely combination, Joan Jett and a Christmas song, that results in an interesting tune. Joan's harsh voice has the right amount of grit to sound spiteful even in the new surroundings. The unusual appearence of a heavy guitar in this usually solemn carol also adds an interesting new sound making this above the average version.

Holiday film releases hold: torches, tequila and tourists

By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

Welcome to the first Annual "Screening Room" Holiday Extravaganza!

(Drum roll and fanfare) Never before in the history of motion pictures has there been an epic of such mind-numbing proportions!

Yes, this is it! Four hundred and seventeen years in the making . . . The apex of man's achievement . . . Well, all right. In truth, today's edition is really nothing more than an expansion of our weekly Unsubstantiated Rumors section. But that's all anybody ever reads in this column, anyway. So . . . Unsubstantiated Rumors and Self-indulgent Musings Department (Special Christmas/Hanukah/Solstice Edition):

● Coming Soon (like, over Christmas vacation):

THE SCREENING ROOM

Dirty Rotten Scoundrels - Steve Martin and Michael Caine play flea-ridden slimeballs in this film directed by Frank "Muppetmaster" Oz (Doesn't that sound like a rap artist? - Ed.). According to the film's press releases, "nice guys finish last." These guys are the winners.

Tequila Sunrise - Mel Gibson and Kurt Russell were high school buddies. Now they're on opposite sides of the law.

Gibson's a drug dealer. Russell's head of narcotics. Michelle Pfeiffer's neither. Written and directed by Robert (Chinatown) Towne.

Rain Man - Dustin Hoffman and Tom Cruise are an unlikely pairing in Barry Levinson's new drama about an opportunistic yuppie (Cruise) and his idiot-savant brother.

Mississippi Burning - Gene Hackman and Willem Dafoe in a drama based on an FBI investigation of Ku Klux Klan murders. Directed by Alan (Midnight Express, Angel Heart) Parker.

The Accidental Tourist - William Hurt and Kathleen Turner are reunited with writer/director Lawrence (Body Heat) Kasdan. Kasdan adapted his screenplay from the novel by Anne Tyler.

Working Girl - Melanie (Something Wild, Body Double) Griffith stars with Harrison Ford and Sigourney Weaver, as a smart working-class girl determined to make it in business. Directed by Mike (Silkwood, Heartburn) Nichols.

Torch Song Trilogy - Harvey Fierstein's highly acclaimed play comes to the screen, adapted by and starring Fierstein. With Anne Bancroft and Matthew Broderick. Directed by Paul Bogart.

Beaches - Bette Midler returns to drama in this film about the friendship between a singer (Midler, for a change) (Ironic, eh? - Ed.) and a lawyer (Barbara Hershey). Directed by Garry Marshall (Nothing in Common, Overboard).

Fugitives - Nick Nolte is a reformed bank robber and Martin Short aspires to be one (a bank robber, not reformed). This is a remake of a French film that hasn't even been released yet.

Talk Radio - Oliver Stone directs the film version of a play by Eric Bogosian (who stars as the film's abrasive talk show host). Also starring Alec (Beetlejuice) Baldwin and Ellen Greene.

● This is a true story: Remember Professor Marvel (the Wizard's Kansas counterpart) from The Wizard of Oz? When director Victor Fleming saw the jacket produced by MGM's costume department, he gave a dollar to a young production assistant, and told him to go to the corner store to pick up a more authentic-looking piece of clothing. The one the boy brought back was used in the film. After shooting the scene in which Dorothy encounters the eccentric old man on a deserted roadside, it was discovered - now, get this - it was discovered that the jacket had originally been expressly tailored for L. Frank Baum (the author of the original Oz books). His name was written on the collar tag.

Valley happenings in music and film close out semester

The holiday season will carry on in good spirits here in the Pioneer Valley the next couple of weeks, despite the departure of thousands of bleary eyed college students. Beginning the countdown to Christmas is an assortment of theatrical and musical events that should add some holiday cheer to even the most beligerent anti-establishment, neo-Nazi, hate mongering undesirables.

Tonight at the Iron Horse Cafe in Northampton, top notch jazz pianist Joanne Bracken plays two shows at 7 and 10 p.m. Noted for her work with Ornette Coleman, Bracken recently released her first quintet recording Fifi Goes To Heaven, collaborating with Branford Marsalis, Terence Blanchard, Cecil McBee and Al Foster.

Following up Bracken on Friday night is boogie piano legend Dr. John. His Cajun street style is classic New Orleans culture. There will also be two shows; 7 and 10 p.m.

Tonight at Katina's in Hadley, two popular local bands will play their final shows before splitting up to pursue various career avenues. Hard rock mavens Split Decision headline the two band bill, while Hatch veterans Bad Grades open. The cover is small and the music will be powerful. Show starts at 9 p.m.

The Academy of Music Opera House in Northampton ends its 7 week run of the film Salaam Bombay tommorrow night with 6:45 and 9:00 showings. Friday begins the run of Richard Gere's personal drama Miles From Home (Gere is an alumnus of the University).

Through tommorrow, the Western Mass. premier of Madame Sousatzka continues at the Amherst Cinema. Shirley MacLaine has recieved accolades for her role as the Russian emigre piano teacher.

At Sheehan's this week, the Headless Horsemen take the stage tonight. Tomorrow, keep an eye on Anastasia Screamed, the opening act for Athens Georgia's Widespread Panic. Anastasia's rough and ready rock sound has been rumbling around Boston for awhile now. Could be a sleeper.

Market saturated by holiday greatest hits packages

By CHRIS A. MUTHER & GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

This Christmas, like every Christmas before since the dawn of time, record companies are looking for big profits from the perenial deluge of "greatest hits" albums. Even acts that haven't had many (or indeed any) hits, are attempting to put out this type of package. To help make some sense of this musical plague, let's examine what's new in this lucrative market.

For a start several "old reliables" or "has beens", depending on your point of view, have released greatest hits LPs. Paul Simon who most recently won widespread acclaim and heavy criticism, in equal helpings, with his Graceland album, has now put out a collection of hits spanning from 1970 to 1986.

Revamped hippies Fleetwood Mac have also hopped onto the retrospective bandwagon with a greatest hits comp. which includes two new songs, both of them equally forgettable.

Call them New Romantic, call them New Wave; ultrafash style hounds and crap musicians The Human League have released a collection of all of their best moments. Whether it be the lamenting "Louise" or the irritatingly poppy yet irresistable "groove" that is "Keep Feeling Fascination," you'll find that every one of these plastique perfections has a place in your angst-ridden adolescence.

Even better is Absolutely Abba, the definitive collection of the Swedish glam-fiends phenomenal 9 year ride at the top of the pop world. Here you'll find all your old favorites, from the divine inanity of early hits like "Ring, Ring" to the heartbreaking "mature" phase of the band (the divorce years) as documented by the sublime "Knowing Me, Knowing You" and the epic showstopping "Winner Takes it All." Only Yello have since dared to enter the territory Abba created for themselves — the existential torment of the European super-rich. A must.

At almost the exact opposite of the thematic spectrum, yet very much a product of Abba are Bananarama, now officially the most successful girl group of all time. they too have released a greatest hits album containing dance floor classics like "Venus", "I Heard a Rumour" with the added bonus of their new single, "Love, Truth and Honesty.

Techno-art pseuds, the Art of Noise are not to be left out of the comp. frenzy. Their collection contains some of their biggest hits including the newie Prince cover, "Kiss" with Tom Jones, but the best moment of the LP is undoubtedly the beautiful "Moments in Love."

Perhps indicating the emergence of a new fad, the infinitely disposable Thompson Twins and Alphaville have both released "remix" albums of their greatest hits. Tell me, do we really need yet another remix of "In the Name of Love" shoved down our throats?

If you're seeking relief from the Top 40 fodder, take a listen to the history of The Clash, which contains many of the band's groundbreaking 45s, as well as mucho of the later drivel.

Also on the "punk lives" trail are The Ramones who have released a collection of thirty of their biggest "hits". Funny, the only hit we can remember the Ramones ever having was a 1978 remake of Phil Spector's "Baby I Love You."

Fans of black leather should also note The Psychadelic Furs' All of This and Nothing which traces the band from "Dumb Waiters" to their latest "smash," "All That Money Wants."

But the most mega and eagerly awaited of the greatest hits comps, at this desk anyway, is that of what was perhaps the ultimate supergroup, in our life time certainly. We speak of course, of Journey featuring the raw sex appeal of the "compact" Steve Perry, a man whose voice could make household pets weep. And everything is here from "Anyway You Want It" to the tender "Faithfully," a ballad about the logistical problems of "life on the road" for the average stadium-rock band, alimomy payments and all. Enjoy.

A Christmas Carol comes out off key

By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

A Christmas Carol
Nebraska Theater Caravan

In this production, Matthew Kamprath does a remarkable impression of Albert Finney (who played the title character in the film of Leslie Bricusse's musical Scrooge). However, Kamprath's interpretation of the character owes as much to Mr. Magoo as to Mr. Finney. He's just too likeable. In fact, when the climactic transformation of his character takes place, one might wonder how to justify the event's two hour preamble. He's really not all that much different from who he was at the play's beginning. (Having Scrooge warm his buns by the fireside - after a few furtive glances about, to be sure he's alone - is no way to develop a character). This is not to say that Matthew Kamprath is not an able, and indeed an extraordinarily gifted stage personality. This unorthodox approach to A Christmas Carol's immortal miser is very likely the responsibility of the production's director, Carl Beck.

Beck appears to have opted for a watered down Christmas Carol almost completely devoid of dramatic interest. In his effort to create a holiday entertainment suitable for anyone of even the most miserly temperment, he has sacrificed the classic tale's central conflict - that of a man hopelessly alienated from his energetic, loving, youthful self. Without the contrast between the old and the new, between the caring and the deceitful, the giving and the taking, the show cannot hope to hold its audience for the unnecessarily long two hour-plus span. This production defies rule 1 of storytelling: Show it, don't tell it.

The music in this misguided effort is beautiful, but might have served itself better in concert form. A Christmas Carol is sprinkled throughout with, appropriately, classic nineteenth century Christmas carols. However, because this music was never intended for such a theatrical presentation, it only serves as a further distraction from the story. The action starts, stops, sings, starts again, stops, sings . . . As a result, the production moves along about as swiftly as the average made for t.v movie, with all its sponsor-pleasing starts and stops.

The Nebraska Theater Caravan's production of A Christmas Carol is a good effort, however seriously flawed. It's innocuous holiday entertainment, developed at a limited-run showcase level.

Reagan says that Indians have right to choose lifestyle

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan told tribal leaders Monday that American Indians "should have the right to choose their own life," and said he does not recall his suggestion in Moscow that the nation may have been wrong in humoring their "primitive" ways.

Indian leaders, after a long-sought meeting with Reagan at the White House, said they were willing to put the controversy surrounding his remarks last May behind them. They said they look forward to further dialogue with the administration of George Bush.

The White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said the president met with 16 tribal leaders for about 20 minutes, outlining a 1983 statement in which he endorsed self-determination for Indian tribes.

"Indians should have the right to choose their own life . . . The right to have a say in what happens in Indian country," Fitzwater quoted the president as saying.

"Tribes must make those decisions, not the federal government," Reagan said, according to the spokesman.

X-mas display attracts thousands to house

WORCESTER (AP) — A biker, coatless children, and elderly ladies who weep at the memory of Christmas past are among the thousands of people who have stomped through the MacKoul's living room since the couple moved in a month ago.

The couple says they have averaged 1,000 visitors nightly to the Dolly Drive house they had barely finished building in November when they unveiled a display of lights, trees and Christmas characters, both live and mechanical.

"We're getting tired, but we're having a good time," said Gloria MacKoul.

The display includes three Christmas trees at their picture windows and one in a loft, 40 moving dolls on their octagonal staircase, life-sized mechanical reindeer and carolers, 30 Disney characters on the front lawn, and several friends and neighbors acting as Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer, Frosty the Snowman, Mrs. Frosty and assorted helpers.

Mrs. MacKoul said she and her husband, an electrical contractor, designed the house just for the Christmas spectacle that they have planned for years. Even the carpenters who built the house donated their services to make a stable for the life-sized Nativity scene that was lifted by crane onto a ledge in the front yard.

And the MacKouls show the spectacle for free.

"I guess we're so happy, we wanted everyone else to be too," Mrs. MacKoul said. "A lot of people come in and are very skeptical. They walk out and are very moved."

Word about the house has spread so fast through the central Massachusetts city of 180,000 people that the MacKouls get thank-you cards addressed only to "the Christmas house."

Their doors are open from 6:30 to 11 p.m. nightly until Dec. 24, when Santa takes off to deliver presents, but the house reopens from Dec. 26 to New Year's Eve. The couple counts 1,200 visitors on weekend nights and they average 900 on weekdays.

None of their neighbors in the expensive new development have raised a fuss about the sudden stream of guests. "We haven't heard one complaint and the traffic is unbelievable," she said.

One neighbor even dons a moose suit every night to entertain children. Other friends canceled a cruise so they could be on hand to help.

The couple has collected Christmas figures for years with an eye to the production. Their daughter, Jennifer, 15, made the Disney figures for the yard.

Between the new house and the Christmas decorations, Mrs. MacKoul said, they didn't have money left for furniture. The Nativity figures were imported from Italy with the vacation money the couple had saved.

THUMBS UP—President Ronald Reagan gives a thumbs up after making a domestic policy speech before top-level government officials and buisness leaders in Washington yesterday.

They prepared this year's display behind shaded windows in the weeks before Thanksgiving to keep it secret. The lights went on Thanksgiving night and within minutes cars began stopping.

Mrs. MacKoul said visitors wait hours in the cold for a tour and one family even took a taxi to the house.

Among their visitors was a schoolbus that arrived one morning.

"We think the kids all begged the bus driver to divert a little from the route so they could see it," Mrs. MacKoul said.

One visitor reached into his pocket and pulled out $7. "He said, 'This is all I have. Please take it. My kids are thrilled,' " Mrs. MacKoul said.

She said the family has declined all donations and suggests they be sent to the Telegram & Gazette of Worcester for the newspaper's toy fund for needy children.

Mrs. MacKoul said older visitors are particularly touched by the display.

Celtics' slide continues; Big Green falls to Bullets

LANDOVER, Md. (AP)– Bernard King scored 10 of his 30 points in the final 10:23 Tuesday night as the Washington Bullets snapped a seven game losing streak with a 115-105 victory over the Boston Celtics.

King and Jeff Malone, who had 21 of his 25 points in the second half, enabled Wahsington to pull away in the final quarter to defeat Boston for the second time this season.

Washington never trailed in the final quarter, outscoring Boston 8-1 over the final 1:48.

Malone hit a jumper with 1:31 to play for a 109-104 lead. After Reggie Lewis made one of two free throws, King hit a jumper and Malone followed with another jumper for a 113-105 advantage with 42 seconds to play.

John Williams capped off Washington's first victory in December with two free throws. Terry Catledge added 19 and Ledell Eackles had 16 for the Bullets.

Kevin McHale scored 22 to lead Boston. Dennis Johnson and Danny Ainge each added 18.

Neither team led by more than two points the final 7:17 of the third quarter and Washington took an 86-84 lead on a dunk by Eackles with a minute left in the period.

The first half ended with Washington's Charles Jones hitting a disputed shot at the buzzer.

Celtics coach Jimmy Rodgers ran from the Boston bench to in front of the Washington bench to protest that the shot came after the buzzer and was called for a technical foul.

George Washington (at Curry Hicks Cage), Jan 5.: The Colonial Women are another team hit hard by graduation, having lost three seniors from last year. So far, they are off to a 1-3 start, including a win over cross-town rival Georgetown.

Leading scorers for the Colonial Women are senior forward Tracey Earley and junior guard Karin Vadelund.

Temple (at the Cage), Jan. 7: The Lady Owls return four starters from last year's 14-15 team. This year, they've jumped out to a 3-3 start.

Temple was the opponent in one of the most exciting games of last season, when the Minutewomen tipped the Owls on Christel Zullo's buzzer beater, 70-69 at the Cage.

Pam Balogh, a 5-10 senior guard/forward, is the leading returnee, along with senior guard Karen Healey and junior forward Rhonda Bates.

Penn State (at State College, PA), Jan. 12: The Lady Lions were hit hard by the loss of All-America point guard Suzie McConnell, as well as 6-3 center Bethany Collins. McConnell was a vital part of the United States team's drive to the gold medal this past September in Seoul.

The Lions, who reached the second round of the NCAA Tournament last year, are off to a 2-3 start (1-0 in the conference). Penn State still features 6-3 junior center Adrian DeVries and 6-0 junior forward Tiffany Chill.

St. Bonaventure (at Olean, NY), Jan. 14: One of the up and coming teams in the conference, the Bonnies have only had a Division I program for two years prior to this one.

This season, they are off to a 4-3 start, despite a loss to Penn State in A-10 play. The Bonnies are led by 5-8 sophomore guard Roni Hergenroeder. UMass fans (or those few who were there) will remember Hergenroeder bombing away for an A-10 playoff record six three-pointers in a loss to the Minutewomen last year in the first round of the A-10 tourney at the Cage.

Duquesne (at the Cage), Jan. 19: The Dukes didn't waste any time, getting right into the A-10 thick of things with a pair of losses to Rutgers and St. Joseph's. Duquesne is 1-5 overall.

However, this is a team that returns all five starters, including senior center Kathy Ridilla, junior guard Katie Collins and senior forward Amy Alger, all who averaged in double figures in scoring last season.

West Virginia (at the Cage), Jan. 19: Could be the surprise of the season. The Mountaineers were off to a 5-0 start before finally falling to Akron last Saturday. Still, the quick jump was enough to earn them a few votes in a recent AP Top 20 poll.

Another team with five returning starters, the Monutaineers feature senior forward/guard Judy Eaton, senior guard Jenny Hillen and senior guard Dionne Morris.

Dartmouth (at Hanover, NH), Jan. 23: A break in the A-10 action for the Minutewomen, as they travel north to face a New England rival.

The Big Green, defending Ivy League champions are paced by sophomore guard Sophia Neely.

Rutgers (at Piscataway, NJ), Jan. 26: Still the cream of the A-10 crop, the Lady Knights were ranked 12th in the country in a recent Top 20 poll.

The Knights won their A-10 opener over Duquesne, but are 3-1 overall, including a loss to eighth-ranked Texas.

National Player-of-the-Year Sue Wicks is gone, but there is plenty left behind, including senior guards Telicher Austin and Janet Malouf, senior center Missy Lender and sophomore forward Vicky Picott.

St. Joseph's (at Philadelphia, PA), Jan. 28: The Hawks, another perennial NCAA team, are 2-1 this year, including a win over Duquesne. Leading the way this year will be junior center Dale Hodges and senior forward Kim Foley.

Michele Pytko and the Minutewomen don't play until Dec. 28 at the Bath Ironworks Classic.

Thank you. This semester has been full of late late nights and incredible headaches, but you stuck it out. Aside from the bad nights and lack of sleep, I hope all of you had fun. That is what it's all about anyway, right??? (We all know it's not the money . . .) If there are things any of you feel should be changed, tell me your suggestions. The hours we spend with each other, hall nights and otherwise, should be the best possible. I hope next semester starts off as well as this one ended. You are really a terrific crew. I'm psyched we got to know each other and work together. Happy Holidays. Take care over intersession. And to the graduates — goodbye and GOOD LUCK.
With love
Wen

Men's hoop to take on Lowell in Cage

Anton Brown and the Minutemen face Lowell tonight.

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team has won two games in a row.

Tonight at 7 p.m., it plays its final game before Christmas. It's opponent will be Division II Lowell University.

All though it may not seem obvious, those are three very good reasons for the Minutemen not to take Lowell lightly.

UMass, which looked very strong in a 79-69 win over Northeastern University Saturday night, is 3-2 and has a chance to go into intersession with some real momentum.

But to take the Chiefs, last year's national champion, lightly could easily ruin that.

Lowell lost six players from last year's championship team, and head coach Don Doucette who left for the University of North Carolina-Asheville and was replaced by Stan Van Gundy.

The losses have left the Chiefs in limbo, and probably account for their 3-8 start.

Last weekend, Lowell traveled to Syracuse, NY, and split a pair of games in the LeMoyne Tournament. The Chiefs lost to Cheyney University, 69-52, in the first round and beat Dowling, 90-71 in the second round.

Co-captains Leo Parent and Brian Parath lead the Chiefs in scoring. Parent, a 6-foot-6 senior center, is tops on the team in points per game (25.8) and rebounds per game (9.9). Parath, a junior guard, averages 18.5 points a game.

For the Minutemen, the captain is also the leading scorer. After a slow start, senior forward David Brown has been hot in his last two games and leads UMass in scoring (17 ppg) and rebounding (10.4 rpg).

A pair of freshmen, Jimmy McCoy and Anton Brown, have also taken a large part of the responsibility for the team's success so far.

McCoy scores 15 points a game. Brown averages 13.4 points and 3.4 assists, and was named Atlantic 10 Rookie-of-the-Week for last week.

Saturday was the first solid game from senior forward Duane Chase. An early slump is reflected in Chase's numbers (8.6 ppg and 7.2 rpg).

But the play of sophomore forward John Tate (8.8 ppg, 7.6 rpg) has boosted the Minutemen in their first five games.

On paper, tonight's game is one UMass should and can win. The Minutemen just have to make sure they take Lowell as seriously as they did Northeastern.

Hoop du-jour: Six-foot-9 center Ben Grodski, who severely sprained an ankle last Friday, is questionable for tonight.

After tonight, the Minutemen will have 14 days off. They will be in action next at the Florida Today Classic Dec. 29.

UMass will battle Florida Tech in the first round while Boston College will meet Coastal Carolina in the other first-round game.

The Minutemen will then dive into the A-10 schedule, and play 10 conference games in a row, beginning with West Virginia in a game at the Springfield Civic Center January 3 at 7:30 p.m.

UMass will play Temple in Springfield January 8 at 7:30 p.m.

The Minutemen have been a stronger second-half team, outscoring opponents 203-185. They have been outscored 173-170 in the first half.

A wish list for UMass athletics

Dear Santa:

Oh I've been soooo good this year Santa. I've helped little old ladies across the street, eaten all my vegtables, and always tipped the bartender.

I know you've been watching who's been naughty or nice. I've thought real hard and I don't think I did anything wrong all year, so I'm going to make an extra special Christmas list. If I could see just a few of these presents under the tree, you'd make me and so many other people very happy.

Ronn Garry

Here is my Christmas list:

- A 7-foot-2 recruit for head basketball coach John Calipari and the Minutemen.
- To see the women's field hockey and soccer teams start a new streak to the NCAA Final Four.
- Let UMass find out that quarterback Dave Palazzi actually has another year of eligibility left.
- Please let Wade Boggs stay in Boston. If the best hitter in baseball is showing us loyalty, maybe we should show some back.
- Let Bruce Hurst lose every one of his starts with the Padres. I really hope Benadict Arnold has an ERA of 9.55. P.S. Santa, put a lump of coal in Mr. Loyalties stocking.
- Please give the Bruins some button-down shirts to match all their ties. And, could you give the Bs some checking intensity and a better than .500 record.
- A one-way ticket for Tony Eason to the Home for Terrible Quarterbacks.
- To see the women's basketball team continue its winning ways throughout the Atlantic 10. P.S., thanks for coach Hewelt, 5-0 is the way to go.
- For Matt, can you please let the Pittsburgh Penguins finally make the playoffs.
- Let the NBA suspend the season until Larry Bird gets back in March. Is it my imagination or has the NBA been a lot more boring this year?
- Of course, our dearest wish: A UMass hockey team and multi-purpose arena. I know it's coming, but with the Boston Slasher, Mike Dukakis, I won't rest easy until I see a Zamboni between periods of a Minuteman hockey game.
- I'd like to see bigger crowds at some of the lesser-known sports like swimming and water polo. While we're at it, can we get a real rage in the cage?
- Can we also put an indoor track at the arena so we can finally see the UMass' track teams at home?
- My biggest wish is to see both UMass basketball teams make the NCAA Tournament. I'd be nice for another whole year if we can at least make it to the Final 64.
- A dome over the boyden courts so the UMass tennis teams can have a season free of rain-outs.
- Let seniors David Brown and Duane Chase have all-conference all-star seasons.
- Let UMass freshmen basketball stars Jim McCoy and Anton Brown have younger brothers that want to attend UMass in the future.
- Put a lump of coal in the Kentucky Wildcats stocking.
- Give the women's soccer team another shot at Wisconsin, this time on a nice day.
- Ditto the field hockey team against Northeastern.
- Could you please leave some scholarship money under Jeff Gettler's tree. The men's soccer team is sooo close to making the playoffs, this could push us over the edge.
- A rabbit's foot under new women's gymnastics coach Alfie Mitchell.
- And finally, please give lots of luck and success to all the UMass sports teams.

Thank you Santa. I'll leave something for you and the reindeer to eat.

Beth Wilbor and the Minutewomen will have a busy intersession schedule once the A-10 games begin.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

As of today, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team is 5-0, enjoying one of its best starts ever.

By the time intersession is over, the Minutewomen will have placed 12 more games under their belts, and will have a better idea of where exactly this team will be going this year.

Early entries have this team under first-year coach Kathy Hewelt heading for bright days very quickly. However, the Minutewomen have yet to open the Atlantic 10 conference part of their schedule.

The following is a review of the games the Minutewomen will be playing during the break:

Bath Ironworks Classic (at Portland, ME.), Dec. 28-29: UMass took part in this four-team tournament last season, falling to Tulane University in the first round before rebounded to beat the College of William and Mary in the consolation match.

This year, along with the Minutewomen, the tournament will feature the hosts from the University of Maine, as well as two new faces — Providence College and Georgia State.

Rhode Island (at Kingston, RI), Jan. 3: This will be the A-10 opener for the Minutewomen. The WRams are off to a rough start this year, having dropped six of their first seven contests.

URI, however, does return one of the tougher players in the conference in 5-foot-11 senior forward Val Gorman, but losing four starters from last year's 7-21 club hasn't helped.

Sox swing deal, get Murphy and Esasky

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox, still reeling from the free agent loss of Bruce Hurst to San Diego, filled two other holes Tuesday by acquiring southpaw Rob Murphy and first baseman Nick Esasky in a five-player deal with the Cincinnati Reds.

After negotiating for more than a week, the Red Sox completed the trade, sending outfielder-first baseman Todd Benzinger, right handed pitcher Jeff Sellers and a player to be named later to the Reds.

Esasky, 28, hit .243 with 15 homers and 62 RBI's in 122 games last season. He committed just six errors in 116 games at first base.

Murphy, 28, was 0-6 with a 3.08 earned run average and three saves in 76 relief appearances. He was used mainly as the set-up man for the Reds ace reliever John Franco.

"We have been searching for left handed help for our bullpen for quite awhile, and we believe that Murphy will be a tremendous addition and certainly enchance our depth there," said General Manager Lou Gorman, who ended a search of several years for a top left handed reliever. "He is one of the premier left-handed relievers in the game today."

The acquisition of Esasky also brought the Red Sox a steady presence at first base. The duties were handled last season by Benzinger, Dwight Evans and Larry Parrish.

"We feel that he will provide more power for us at first base, especially at Fenway Park," Gorman said.

Benzinger, 26, moved from the outfield to play first base for the first time last season. He hit .254 with 13 homers and 70 RBIs. He is a switch-hitting native of Cincinnati.

Benzinger broke with Boston in 1987, hitting .278 with 8 home runs and 43 RBIs.

Sellers, 23 and considered a top prospect three seasons ago, was inconsistent and had control problems. He was 13-22 overall, including 1-7 during a hard-luck season in 1988.

In five of his losses, the Red Sox were shutout, including on Oct. 1, in the next to last game of the season when he was beaten 1-0 in Cleveland despite allowing just one hit and striking out career-high 10 batters in 7 1-3 innings. In his other two losses, the Red Sox scored one run and four runs.

Sellers also missed two months when he suffered a broken hand after being hit by a line drive off the bat of Cleveland's Joe Carter.

Security will be tight for Farrakhan

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Protesters and spectators can expect heavy security at the Fine Arts Center for Minister Louis Farrakhan's lecture, University of Massachusetts officials said.

At least a dozen public safety officers will be on hand for the speech by Farrakhan, in addition to other precautions taken by the Public Safety department which they do not wish to make known to the public. The minister, scheduled to speak Thursday, has caused controversy because of comments he made concerning Judaism, sparking some to consider him anti-Semitic. (See related story, page 3.)

Ticket sales for the lecture are restricted to students, faculty and staff of the Five College community. Identification must be shown before purchasing a ticket and upon admittance to the lecture.

People entering the Fine Arts Center on the night of the event will be subjected to metal detectors and a body search performed by security personnel, with the additional precaution of opening all bags. Cameras and recorders will not be allowed inside.

"We have done as much planning as possible for this," said Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson. "We intend to maintain a safe and secure environment."

The Jewish Defense Organization, a spinoff of the Jewish Defense League, is scheduled to stage a protest of Farrakhan's appearance. There have been unconfirmed rumors the Ku Klux Klan also will demonstrate the speech.

The JDO, which became national in 1985, instructs its members on the use of firearms, karate and other methods of confrontation to maintain the rights of Jewish people. The JDO, which attended Farrakhan's last engagement in Atlantic City, has had riotist confrontations with other protesters.

"He has no place in speaking here. He is a bigot, a racist and a traitor to this country," said Mordechai Levi, head of the New York-based JDO. Levi cited Farrakhan's dealings with Colonel Muammar Qaddafi of Libya. Farrakhan visited Qaddafi in 1984.

Hilson said he has had communication with state police in Connecticut, who speculate the Grand Wizard of the KKK may appear at the event. The Collegian was unable to confirm this.

Hilson said he was aware of groups who may protest here. "If they come into our community and violate our rules and policies, they can expect to be removed," Hilson said.

Because the University is public property, protesters from outside the community, such as the KKK and JDO, are free to demonstrate in the designated area near the reflecting ponds at Haigis Mall. Police will be videotaping the protesters and may charge anyone leaving the marked area with trespassing.

"We have prepared for the worst-case scenario," Hilson said.

Farrakhan's own 50-man security force – known as the "Fruit of Islam" – will encircle him in a wide defense perimeter. The security team will be scanning the crowd for any disturbances or "fanatics" but will not aid in the body search.

Basketball players withdraw

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Two University of Massachusetts basketball players charged with breaking and entering into an Amherst home have withdrawn from the school.

Following a pre-trial conference last Thursday, at which it was determined seniors David Brown, 22, and Duane Chase, 21, will each face two counts of breaking and entering in District Court on April 6, the two decided to withdraw from the University.

UMass spokeswoman, Jeanne Hopkins, declined to explain the reasons for the withdrawal, except to say that it is not related to the criminal charges.

The two players and 21-year-old George Hardin, a UMass basketball recruit and transfer student from Salt Lake City, were arrested on Jan. 3 by Amherst police and charged with the reported break-in of a home on that morning.

Police later found a television set and burglary tools, along with other items linked to the crime, in the car Brown, Chase, and Hardin were in, according to reports.

The three pleaded innocent to charges of unarmed burglary, possession of Students in, serenity out

"The station wagons arrived at noon, a long shining line that crossed through the west campus. In single file they eased around the orange I-beam sculpture and moved toward the dormitories. The roofs of the station wagons were loaded down with carefully secured suitcases full of light and heavy clothing; with boxes of blankets, hoods and shoes, stationery and books, sheets, pillows, quilts; with rolled-up rugs and sleeping bags; with bicycles, skis, rucksacks, Eastern and Western saddles, inflated rafts."

Forget the parking spaces, the open tables, the easy shopping, the quick banking. Plan on an extra ten minutes to drive through town. Be prepared to stand up on the bus.

We're back.

Thousands of us – college students from far and wide – pour into Amherst at the beginning of each semester, lugging our belongings in buses and cars. A small, tranquil New England town transforms overnight into a mecca of post-adolescence.

"When they first come back, it's the most noticeable," said Ruth Hamilton, a library assistant at the Jones Library. "You can always tell the ones that are lost."

Amherst without students is a different town, people who live and work here say. It's spacious. Like a student without classes and exams to worry about, the town collectively relaxes.

"Our activity goes way down. There are less of almost everything," said

$3 million falls as budget axe swings

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administrators have recently begun cutting corners and imposing fees in an effort to offset the $5 million budget cut mandated by Gov. Dukakis in November.

To meet the cuts' demands, the administration levied a one-time $50 fee added to this semester's tuition bill, and made a five percent, $3 million across-the-board budget cut, said James M. Langley, associate vice chancellor of university relations and development.

Langley said further savings were made after denying entrance to 100 qualified high school applicants. Langley said this was done by sending 300 students denial letters because only one of three accepted students eventually enroll.

Additional funds totaling $800,000 came from the Board of Trustees reserves, Langley said.

Board of Regents Chancellor Franklyn G. Jenifer recently said 200 part-time faculty from all of the state's public

Officials say freeze may cut majors

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The hiring freeze in effect until July 1, at the University of Massachusetts will deteriorate the quality of undergraduate and graduate education, said several faculty members and administrators.

"With the hiring freeze everything will work along, but it's like developing leukemia – you just get weaker and weaker," said Charles Moran, director of the writing program.

Murray Schwartz, dean of the faculty of the humanities and fine arts, said if a hiring freeze remains in effect for too long, majors will collapse, faculty will abandon the University and the recruitment of graduate students will become very difficult.

"The programs that have people missing are in real trouble," Schwartz said.

As of Wednesday, all but three authorized faculty searches in the humanities and fine arts had been cancelled because of lack of funds, Schwartz said.

The new admissions building, although presently operating, is slated to officially open in the spring, after final restorations.

Admissions has new home

By MARIA SACCHETTI

Prospective University of Massachusetts students and their parents will be greeted in a different light this year with the opening of the University Admissions Center.

Admissions Director Timm Rinehart said he hopes the "hospitable and gracious" four-story, brick building, located near Hills South, diagonally across from the Newman Center, will draw more students to the University and boost enrollment.

Formerly housed in the "cold" and "institutional" confines of the Whitmore Administration Building, Rinehart said the new center, a renovated building that once housed Kappa Sigma fraternity, will reflect positively on the University.

"The first place [students] come is the admissions office," he said. "It gets you off to a good start. We'll make a better impression all around."

Rinehart said the functional quality of the center will improve markedly, with the addition of a conference room, a waiting room, space to hold interviews and to show videos of the University.

"It will enable us to do our work better," he said. "Every year we invite groups of guidance counselors to come to our campus. Now we can work out of our new conference room," instead of a room in the Campus Center.

Funding for the 3-year project was provided largely by the $800,000 allocated by the Board of Trustees for the purchase and renovation of the building, Rinehart said.

The University Foundation Inc., a private corporation, also assisted in this process, he said.

Contributions totalling $60,000 from the Classes of '52, '58, '60, '68, '73, '78, and '83 were used to purchase the center's furnishings, glass solarium, and four original pieces of art, he said.

The building also houses the New Students Program, which facilitates summer orientation for first-year and transfer students, its campus tour program, and the Chancellor's talent award scholarship program, Rinehart said.

Although the building is open, a formal ceremony will not be held until spring when the final touches on the renovations are completed, he said.

Rivals again challenge Silkoff/Rabinowitz ruling

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

An out-of-court settlement, appearing to clear the way for Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz to take office as Student Government Association co-presidents, has instead prompted claims the agreement is non-binding and will create dissension in the SGA.

Student Supreme Court Justices John Sanchez and Kathy White, and former justice Lorraine Dawe were among the defendants in a suit filed by Silkoff and Rabinowitz more than a month ago. The suit charged that their civil rights were violated and they were barred from office because of their political beliefs.

Rabinowitz is a member of the Young Communist League and Silkoff describes herself as a progressive.

The legally-binding consent decree, signed Dec. 16, states the SGA will recognize the pair as presidents and pay court costs and attorney's fees, according to Edward Etheredge, attorney for Silkoff and Rabinowitz.

The decree also stipulates Silkoff and Rabinowitz will be paid a stipend by the SGA representing the pay they would have received during the past year, which Rabinowitz estimated is about $1,500 for each.

Both Silkoff and Rabinowitz said they are currently serving as co-presidents, but Justice Tom Ralph and Commuter Area Senator W. Greg Rothman said Sanchez and White have no authorization to speak for the entire judiciary.

"I think they were intimidated by Silkoff and Rabinowitz," Ralph said. "It's unfortunate that they were."

Rothman said the supreme court cannot ratify an election, and the agreement is not enough to allow Silkoff and Rabinowitz to take office.

"They have to be ratified by the senate," he said. "That's not ever going to happen."

But Silkoff said the decision of the student judiciary is valid and binding for all parties involved, including the SGA.

Silkoff cited Article 7, section 3 of the SGA constitution, which states, "All decisions rendered by the student judiciary shall be binding on all affected parties."

"We won the election legitimately," she said. "They can yell and scream as much as they want, but it's over."

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said the constitution is "very vague and ambiguous," and cannot conclusively render the consent decree invalid.

Orefice said there is no reason for the senate to fail to ratify the election.

"There was nothing wrong with that election," she said. "You're not dealing with people who are seeing this as a legal argument. A lot of people are seeing this as an ideological argument."

Orefice said Silkoff and Rabinowitz are in office, but are not being paid and do not have signature power.

Many see last 20 years dividing blacks and Jews

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

First of a three-part series on black-Jewish relations

Once upon a time blacks and Jews in the United States, for the most part, lived and worked together in peace — two minority groups who shared similar histories of fighting oppressors and prejudices.

With the ensuing visit to the University of Massachusetts of Minister Louis Farrakhan, the controversial Nation of Islam leader who some claim is anti-Semitic, many people, black and Jewish, have come to agree that black-Jewish relations in 1989 are much less peaceful than at any time in the past.

Jews joined blacks in their fight for civil rights, and the two groups were close. But by the late 1960s, tension between the groups swelled.

In a 1967 letter to Morris B. Abram, president of the American Jewish Committee, Dr. Martin Luther King, reacting to fears among some Jews of black anti-Semitism, wrote: "[The Southern Christian Leadership Conference] has expressly, frequently and vigorously denounced anti-Semitism, and will continue to do so. It is not only that anti-Semitism is immoral — though that alone is enough. It is used to divide Negro and Jew."

Former Boston Globe writer Jonathan Kaufman, who has since written a book on the history of blacks and Jews, wrote in the Jewish magazine Tikkun that "when King called for a society that judged people 'not by the color of their skin but by the content of their character,' he spoke a language that touched not only blacks but Jews."

However, Kaufman believes the split between the two groups began in 1967, when "calls for Black Power replaced King's plea for integration, [and] black organizations became more hostile to whites, especially Jews."

While at the same time King was expressing his support of the Jewish community, some within that community were seriously concerned about anti-Semitic attitudes among blacks.

B'nai B'rith President Rabbi Jay Kaufman (not related to Jonathan Kaufman) wrote in a 1968 article that "varied segments of the Negro community see a multiplicity of forces, real and imagined, impeding their advance. Among these forces . . . is the Jew, who Negroes have

King encourages student activism to achieve her father's dream

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Yolanda King, the oldest child of slain civil rights activist Martin Luther King, Jr., spoke last week to nearly 1,000 people at her alma mater, Smith College, urging them to continue the struggle against inequality and to fulfill the "dream" her father left behind.

King, who was delayed more than an hour Thursday because of a snowstorm, encouraged the celebration of the Jan. 16 national holiday to celebrate her father's work, but warned that efforts to realize his dream should not be relaxed.

"We, as Americans, immortalize and honor symbols of heroic deeds done on the battlefields of war and violence," she said. "At long last we have a chance to celebrate a man of peace."

But King said it is "far easier to build monuments and to have programs than to build a better world."

"We must refuse to let the dream be deferred," she said. "If we choose to let this holiday become an excuse for action, it will be a grotesque farce."

"Either we learn to live together as brothers and sisters, or we will perish as foes," she said.

The Civil Rights Movement — sparked in 1955 when Rosa Parks, a black woman, refused to give up her seat to a white person on a bus in Birmingham, Ala. — has lost its fire in past years, King said.

"We have come a long way. But we can't stop here. Unfortunately, many did stop," she said.

"Today, young people have become laid back — forgetful, I guess, of the tremendous sacrifices made," she said. "Those who have stuck with the struggle on every college campus are not as large in number as I would like, but they are very much continuing."

The alarmingly poor voter turnout and lack of student resistance is making it easier for colleges and universities to instill sweeping budget cutbacks, King said.

"You must just not work with politicians, you must work on them to ensure they are representing your best interests," she said. "It is imperative that kind of involvement come from young people."

King recommended that every college or university offer a mandatory course in ethnic studies or multi-cultural diversity to create awareness and to reinvigorate students.

"We must get off our apathy, and get back to the work that is still left to be done," she said. "Indeed we will have a society where people don't judge you by the color of your skin but by the content of your character."

King is co-director of NUCLEUS, a company of performing artists dedicated to promoting "positive energy" through the arts. She also serves on the board of directors of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, Inc., in Atlanta.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Possible KKK visit causes distress

Minority women say they're most vulnerable

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

When she was 23, living in the south, and married to a southerner, Maria Voorhees said she listened to her husband's family talk of Ku Klux Klan stories.

Voorhees, 46, a Puerto Rican survivor of New York City riots in the 1960s, said she thought when she was younger the KKK might physically harm her even though she had never seen a klansman.

Now the riots and stories have dusted.

But the Connecticut State Police have speculated the KKK may come to this campus when Farrakhan visits Thursday, to which she says, "I still want to see them on TV and not around me."

Voorhees and many minority women who work or study at the University of Massachusetts feel they are the most vulnerable group should racial complications erupt.

She says incidents such as those captured recently by motion pictures like "Betrayed" and "Mississippi Burning" are the only contact most of today's youth have with the Klan.

The closer one is to the KKK, the more the fear intensifies, she says.

Agenes Quinones, a 28-year-old Puerto Rican woman, says she has heard stories about the KKK but says having them come to campus will be like flying to Rome to see the Colliseum. "It has never really touched home as I expect it will this time."

Lori Edmonds, a 21-year-old black student, says when she heard the KKK and Jewish Defense Organization are slated to have a roped-off protest area outside of Farrakhan's speech at the Fine Arts Center she called her mother.

"When I heard about it yesterday my heart just dropped. I'm scared to death. Something's going to happen; you can just see it," she says. "I hope to God I don't see them in their outfits that will provoke something right there."

Quinones, an administrator on campus, says, "As a woman of color I feel even more vulnerable. I catch myself looking over my shoulder." She says she goes the extra step to lock her doors on campus when she is alone and park in lighted areas.

"It's not whether he (the grand wizard of the KKK) says good or bad; it's just his presence that makes me concerned," she says. "There's something in the back of my head that reminds me of the other racial incidents on campus. If it happened then, it can happen again."

The incidents include a racial brawl in October of 1986 and last spring's fight between six white and two black men.

With students coming back from their homes, Quinones says, "You can't really tell where their state of mind is."

Sharon Park, a 20-year-old Korean student, says, "I don't feel like there's a physical threat, but that they're going to go around and people will listen to them. I'm fearful if there might be some kind of violence that night. It's just their history."

Alison Buckholtz, a 19-year-old Jewish student, says because the KKK's past activities are so despised, she does not see the organization as the immediate danger. Instead she also agrees that what the KKK, JDO, and Farrakhan provoke in people later will be the danger.

"They leave and we have to be there to clean it up," she says. "It makes me feel unsafe as a Jew, but being a woman adds to that. It's not just a matter of sitting there and quivering but also feeling angry."

Volunteers needed

Necessities/Necesidades, an organization in Northampton that works with battered women and their children, is looking for volunteers. Creative, dependable women are needed to staff their 24-hour hot line, provide advocacy, counseling and community education. Training begins Feb. 25. Bilingual and/or bicultural women are strongly urged to apply. Contact Patricia White by Feb. 10 at 586-1125.

Program relocates

EWC suspends counseling program

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

Despite attempts to stabilize the counseling program at the Everywoman's Center, the EWC will begin another semester without counseling services.

Carol Wallace, director of the EWC, said the program was temporarily terminated Friday because the counseling coordinator's contract had expired.

Wallace said the EWC has been searching for a new coordinator, but does not expect the position to be filled until March. The hiring process was delayed when the chairperson of the committee formed to review applications resigned, she said.

"Any break in services is unfortunate," Wallace said, "but we'll do anything we can to make that break as brief as possible. Mostly I am pleased that we were given the go-ahead to search for and fill this position because there is a freeze on hiring and only a handful of positions are being filled."

Jeffery Hersh, director of Mental Health, said he expects the overflow from the EWC to create a larger demand for counseling at Mental Health and other campus and community services, resulting in longer waits for appointments.

"Some women," he said, "may elect not to seek services anywhere on campus other than the Everywoman's Center. Some women will be put off by having to be referred and may not follow up."

William Weitzer, assistant vice chancellor for student affairs, said, "This is a serious problem, but it is not the only serious problem on this campus. Searches take time." He said University hiring usually takes up to two months but may take longer because of budget complications.

Wallace said when the full-time, permanent position is filled, counseling services at the EWC will be fully restored.

Until that time, the EWC will continue to make referrals to other University departments and to community agencies, she said. EWC staff have compiled lists of counseling services, individual therapists, and guides to using these resources.

Last semester, Mercedes Del Valle, former Women's Admissions and General Education (WAGES) program coordinator, was promoted to the counseling position when WAGES was discontinued because of budget cuts.

Del Valle was an interim appointment, Wallace said. "Her contract ended at the end of the fiscal year. It is University policy that appointments can only be made for a limited amount of time, and cannot simply be reappointed."

Del Valle said although she is looking forward to continuing her education and working as a private counselor, she is upset by requirements that forced the termination of her job. Del Valle said she expects to receive her doctorate in two months, but does not have a master's degree in social work, which is a requisite for the counseling position.

"The whole thing is just a little weird. I've been doing the job, but I'm overqualified, so I can't apply," Del Valle said.

EWC under realignment

The administrative realignment of the Everywoman's Center, recommended by the Tillis Commission's report on minority student services last July, will become a reality this semester.

EWC Director Carol Wallace said the Department of Educational Access and Outreach, to which the EWC formerly reported, has been dissolved, and the EWC will instead report to the Dean of Students Office.

"We don't know exactly what the impact of this change will will be," Wallace said. "There are things about the DEAO that I will miss, like working with several other programs that clearly share our commitment to being a multicultural organization."

Wallace said the transition has not yet been completed because the acting dean of students has not been replaced.

The common cold has uncommon cure

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

Mom says to drink lots of orange juice. Dad says to take two aspirin every four hours and stay warm. Friends say to skip all your heavy classes and sleep a lot. Everyone has a remedy for that middle-of-the-winter cold.

What is the best way to relieve that sniffling, sneezing, coughing, aching, stuffy head, fever feeling that comes every winter: natural remedies or prescribed medicine?

Just as everyone in the family has a different cure for the cold, members of the medical profession also have various (often conflicting) antidotes about the widespread winter offender.

Latifa Amdur, a registered acupuncturist and head of the Acupuncture and Natural healing Center in Amherst, takes a holistic approach to the body's imbalances, instead of treating the symptoms of colds. She said she does not believe in any universal cold remedies and that she makes her treatments "very specific to the individual."

Acupuncture, a therapeutic medical system in which needles as thin as thread are placed just beneath the skin's surface and hooked up to wires that generate an electrical charge, originated in China thousands of years ago. The technique is said to feel like a vibrating massage.

Traditional acupuncture does not separate the physical, emotional, and psychological dimensions of the individual as definitively as conventional medicine.

HEALTHWATCH

"The purpose of herbal medicine and acupuncture is not to attack a specific germ or disease in the body," she said. Instead, she said, it "seeks to restore the balance of the body."

Eastern and western medicine differ greatly in their approaches to the body, and Amdur compared the two approaches with a war analogy:

In western medicine, she said, the germ or sickness is a weak force that is constantly silenced by the stronger force — medicine. In contrast, eastern medicine strengthens the weak areas of the body, so that all forces live in harmony.

"Western medicine doesn't allow the body to strengthen itself," Amdur said, while the eastern approach strives to treat the patient's imbalance and allow the body to become balanced.

Amdur's approach has only one herbal medicine designed specifically for the cold, opposed to western medicine's many. A tablet, called Yin Chiao, contains 13 different herbal properties that relate to different properties in the body, she said.

"Rather than creating destruction, you're creating balance, strength and harmony within the body," she said.

Dr. Aram Tomasian, a private practitioner in the Boston area who uses the traditional approach to the cold of recommending non-prescription drugs such as Dristan and Contac, said, "I don't think that herbal medicines and acupuncture are harmful; however, I don't recommend them."

Although traditional and non-traditional medicine disagree on treatment, they do agree that preventing the headache, drippy nose and stuffed-up head syndrome is a different story all together. Both Amdur and Tomasian said there is no way to absolutely avoid a cold and also no perfect "cure-all" treatment.

January brings peace to some, boredom to others

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

For some, the month of January brings a welcome moment of peace and quiet to this usually overcrowded college town, an ideal time to catch up on credits, sleep, read or simply watch television.

For others, such as University of Massachusetts student Martin Kozlol, January is just boring.

"Nothing really exciting happens," said Kozlol, who spent most of the month working behind the information desk in the Campus Center.

For student Meagan Svendsen, who spent the month in French 120 preparing for a trip to France next fall, the return of the usual crowds will be a welcome sight.

"It has been nice and quiet, but if I'd wanted a small school, I would have gone to one," she said.

Not every place in town is quiet during January. With the dormitories closed for the month, students searching for a good time take their business off campus, usually to the downtown bars.

"It's been packed, every night," described student Jeff Dubiel, a bartender at Barselotti's. "We get all of the seniors who stay up to take a class because they don't like their parents."

According to the Office of Continuing Education, 2,568 students enrolled in courses offered during wintersession. Most of the classes count for three credits, providing students with the chance to catch up, work on their grade point average, or take a course that couldn't be fit into the normal semester schedule.

Senior Joe Afonso took two classes during the abbreviated semester so he could satisfy his core requirements, and eventually graduate on time.

"It was tough," he said. "I have not shaved in a week or so. Three weeks does not compare to an entire semester, though some teachers try to prove it does."

There was also plenty of work to do for Robert Bagg, chairman of the English department. While some of his fellow English professors were off in such exotic locations as Paris, New Orleans or Bimini Island, Bagg said he was busy "spending what little money the state has given us."

"Most faculty use this time for doing their own work and preparing for classes," he said. "I've got to run this place, hire [teaching assistants] for this semester and such. It's not really a vacation."

Bagg is among those who enjoy the void left behind by the student exodus at semester's end. "I live in Hatfield, which is never anything less than quiet. But I notice it when I come over the Coolidge bridge in the morning, and it's not jammed."

Student Kevin Murphy said, "I didn't miss the crowds. I was able to relax more, and had more free time to do my own reading or go out."

■ wintersession serenity

Amherst police Captain David Jankowski. Last week, during a snowstorm that turned to freezing rain, Jankowski was glad the colleges were still on break.

"If the students were back now, we would be very busy with accidents," he said.

Eating out in Amherst is a lot easier during January. At 2 p.m. in Bonducci's Cafe, half the tables are empty, and there's no line at the counter.

That's better for the customers who enjoy better service, but employees don't necessarily like the dead time.

"Not in this business, no," said a waitress at the Gaslite, who refused to be identified. "We depend on customers."

The students, she said, "don't bother me. There are more good ones than bad ones."

But, she said, "I stay out of Amherst during the semester as much as I can."

According to 1985 census figures, Amherst has a population of about 36,000. The town does not record how many of those are students — but almost 15,000 students live in residence halls at the three colleges in town, UMass, and Amherst and Hampshire colleges. Most of those on-campus dormitories do not house students when school is not in session.

Almost half the town leaves for two periods of the year.

"I wouldn't say that it's better or worse," said town clerk Cornelia D. Como. "It's just that there aren't as many people around."

Most Amherst police officers take time off only during the summer and January, and vandalism and neighborhood disturbance calls go way down, Jankowski said.

Still. . .

"We miss them," he said. "They're part of the community and everything. It's what makes Amherst Amherst."

One group of Amherst residents seems to just wait for the quiet times.

"We see more senior citizens when the students are away," Hamilton said. "Come summer, we'll see people we haven't seen all year. They'll come out again."

WINDOW TO THE FUTURE

Technological change. How do you keep up?

Ten short years ago, daring people were talking about 1,000 bits of memory on a single device. Today, it's millions. Tomorrow, anything's possible.

A decade ago, card edge connectors with 20 contacts per inch were sufficient. Today, connector systems boast three times the density. Tomorrow will push designs even harder.

A few short while ago, a telephone call was a telephone call. Today, telecommunications has gone from analog to digital, from simple relay switches to computers, from copper wire to fiber optics.

At Teradyne, we've got to stay one step ahead of technological change because we're working with the world's leading high tech companies designing and building for today and tomorrow.

We're meeting that challenge every day — in our electronics VHF divisions in Boston and California, in our world-class backplane connection system, and circuit board complex in Nashua, New Hampshire, and in our telecommunications network test division in Deerfield, Illinois. In fact, we're the recognized leader in each of our businesses.

We need creative people to help us continue our track record of success — to develop solutions to changing questions. Excitement, career opportunity, growth, energy. That's what you'll find at Teradyne.

The challenges are great.
So are the rewards.

Additional $4 million boosts plans for Smith College science center

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — A $4 million contribution has boosted the effort to expand the Smith College Clark Science Center, according to Charlotte Heartt, director of development at the school.

Heartt said the donation, which was given earlier this month by a Smith alumna and her husband, is the largest single donation ever received by the all-women's college. The gift brings the total raised for the project to about $10 million, she said.

The expansion project is expected to cost $18.5 million, of which $12 million is designated for the addition of two new buildings for the center.

Construction is scheduled to begin in May.

Smith College President Mary Maples Dunn said the expansion is a response to changes in technology and the growing number of science and math majors at Smith, who now account for a quarter of all students enrolled there.

Building Committee Chairperson Betty Ivey said the expansion will relieve space problems such as overfilled classrooms and makeshift research space. The buildings will be constructed to accommodate the science library, a computer resource center, new classrooms and specialized equipment such as lasers and a nuclearmagnetic resonance machine, she said.

Smith's largest department, psychology, will be moved to the center as well. The present science facility has received no major improvements since the 1960s.

As far as satisfying the needs of each field of study, "everybody gets something," Ivey said. "Some departments have greater needs than others. We worked very hard to make sure every department was reasonably pleased."

Heartt said the school's fundraising campaign began in October. The Smith College trustees required the school to raise half of the $12 million before a construction date could be scheduled. That announcement came last month after the campaign received two $1 million contributions and a $650,000 grant from the Pew Charitable Trusts. The expansion project is part of a five-year, $125 million fundraising campaign.

According to Heartt, this second phase of the renovation is scheduled to start in January, 1991. Ivey said the construction will make space for other departments not housed in the center. Expansion project money not used for the 62,000 square foot addition is designated for relieving those departments, she said.

The second phase will include structural improvements on Burton, McConnell and Sabin-Reed halls. Classroom and laboratory space will also be made available for the departments of mathematics, physics, astronomy, biological sciences and chemistry. According to Smith's Office of Public Relations, some instruction and research is being conducted in storage space.

The expansion is the largest construction project at the college since the $5 million West Street athletic facility was completed in 1986.

UMass anthrax research probed

Research into the anthrax virus at the University of Massachusetts is scheduled to be brought before the Amherst Board of Health during tomorrow's meeting.

Members of the American Friends Service Committee have said the research is a health threat, and have asked Chancellor Joseph Duffey to halt the program.

In mid-January, they brought their concerns to the Amherst selectboard, which decided the matter belonged in front of the board of health.

Anthrax bacillus is a highly contagious, usually deadly virus, that most often infects cows and sheep. During World War II, it was stockpiled for germ warfare use and the UMass research is part of a US Army Biological Defense Research Program — leading opponents of the research to call it "germ warfare."

The University has maintained the research in the microbiology department involves a non-virulent, non-infectious form of the disease, and the research is intended to find a vaccine.

But people opposed to the research say their investigation has found the search for a vaccine requires the deadly germ.

"We are challenging them on what they say about their research," said Frances Crowe, an AFSC member.

John Bonifaz, who is coordinating the opposition, said his group is upset because the effort is funded by the Defense Department.

"We do not want to see an independent public university of higher education involved in research for the military," he said. "It destroys the integrity of the institution."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or of the Professional Press Service.

Sex, drugs, and fluff

This intersession, I kept abreast of all the current events. I read all of the important and prestigious news sources. Stuff like People, USA Today, and The National Enquirer. I learned a lot.

Did you know that Prince Charles and Lady Diana are practically splitsville? I'm truly horrified. My faith in marriage is shaken. Poor, poor, Charles and Di. What about the children? What was a marriage with a fairy-tale beginning has a Dallas-style ending.

Pamela McCarthy

Can you believe it? People asked Morton Downey Jr. to be one of the judges for the best and worst dressed poll of '88. I was mortified. Apparently, a reader was too, because he wrote an angry letter to People and blasted them for their questionable choice. It's so good to know that there still are concerned and involved people in this world.

Did you hear about Drew Barrymore? She sure has had her problems to deal with, specifically, drug and alcohol problems. Golly gee, I heard that a drug and alcohol abuse epidemic has been discovered amoung American teenagers. I would never have guessed it, would you? Of course, you realize that after a month or two, this subject would fall from the media's list of Socially Correct Things to Cover — with the public gladly following suit.

I'm leaving the planet in two years. (Hey, stop that cheering!) I read in the Enquirer (or some magazine like that) that a federation of aliens will come to Earth to teach us about their advanced technology and use our recourses. This, uh, tourist warned us to accept their "help" or we'd be vaporized by their zap-guns. He dropped by the planet just to let us know ahead of time. His choice of such a credible news source is a testament to his superior intelligence.

Had enough? Of course not. We love to gossip. We don't want to know about what goes on in the world that could affect us. That's too boring. Your backyard might have been a toxic waste dump for the past five years, but hey, it's boring and it doesn't really affect you. The country could be on the verge of another armed "conflict", but it doesn't affect you. It's (yawn) boooorrrring.

We'd rather know how Barbara Bush is going to decorate the White House. Inquiring minds want to know about Ronald Reagan's prostrate problems (now that's boring).

Does anyone want to read about George Bush's foreign policy and how it might affect the country? I wouldn't be surprised if more people would be interested in his health problems (I'd say "care" again, but somehow, I don't think that's the right word). When Jim and Tammy Bakker were spewing off their false sermons and ripping off their believers, nobody noticed. Then came along a scandal that linked them with sex and drugs and oh, boy, did we ever care. As we giggled over their sins, we privately thanked God we weren't punished for our own.

Other people's medical problems, divorces, drug addictions, and sexual quirks are boring. I know that most people are guilty of the same things. If I want to hear about that tripe, I'll talk to my friends, neighbors, and classmates.

A little bit of fluffy scandal is fine. But lately, it's been getting too much. We shell out the money for this stuff, and the publishers will give us what we want. What we want is pathetic.

Politics is a party without the California Raisins or taste

It cost nearly thirty million dollars to get "the Gipper" out of office.

The inauguration of George Bush and Dan Quayle was on January 20th, yet the celebrations began on the 18th and lasted until January 21st. A four day inauguration. Doesn't the actual inauguration take a little less than an hour?

Meredith O'Brien

It's a good thing that most of that thirty million dollars came from private contributions; I'm sure that the taxpayers would not appreciate footing the bill for one thousand miniature flashlights. During the opening inaugural ceremonies, the first one thousand people to enter the Lincoln Memorial Center received little flashlights — representing a "thousand points of light".

On January 19th, Chuck Norris and Arnold Schwartzenegger, both knowledgeable political enthusiasts, joined other celebrities in a tribute to George and Barbara Bush at the Washington Convention Center. It was a sold-out, expensive, star-studded extravaganza.

Inauguration Day seemed more like a coronation rather than a swearing in of an elected official. Former President Ronald Reagan and President Bush rode to Capitol Hill in a luxurious $600,000 limousine. After the traditional oaths of office had been taken, there was a Congressional luncheon and inaugural parade given in the president's honor. Countless (large) flower arrangements enhanced the Capitol building. Bush and Quayle were presented with carved crystal bowls 'on behalf of the people and members of Congress" ("the people" have great taste in gifts), as they dined on gourmet food and wine.

It is a custom to have a parade for the new president, but this parade was extraordinarily expensive and long. One hundred marching units, fifty-six bands and seventy-nine floats were included in the three-hour parade. (The California Raisins cancelled out of the parade, so Bob Hope was hired in their place.)

Ten inaugural balls followed that evening, providing food, drink and dancing to the most affluent people in Washington (the people who were celebrating the continuation of the Reagan Era and tax loopholes).

But the party did not stop on Inauguration Day. On January 21st, Vice-President Dan Quayle spoke at a luncheon given in his honor. Meanwhile, the new president opened up the White House to the first 25 people at the door. Those special few were given a tour of the White House and were provided with an extravagant meal.

Being inaugurated as president or vice-president deserves some "pomp and circumstance". After all, getting elected is an amazing accomplishment — but there are ridiculous extremes. Hearing Chuck Norris tell us why he admires George Bush and 1,000 little flashlights is not my idea of presidential prestige. This was the most costly inauguration ever. Where did all of the money go? Granted, most of the money (supposedly) came from private sources, but what is the definition of "most?" Does that mean that the taxpayers only contributed $10 million?

With all of the complaining that is going on about the enormous deficit, our government can not afford such frivolities. What we need is some executive class and style, which does not cost thirty million dollars and does not include the California Raisins.

Respecting elders means much nodding and smiling

"Before you contradict an old man, my fair friend, you should endeavor to understand him." So wrote George Santayana, an early 20th century philosopher. When I read this quotation I realized that I had been making a sincere effort to understand my elders, and to respect and value their thoughts and opinions.

Tom Ciampi

There have been occasions when I had the urge to question an argument from a venerable acquaintance; to label their contention as foolish and narrow-minded lunacy. I have been able to resist this, I'm not sure if I can hold out much longer.

It was easy to respect my elders as a child, because my parents had demanded that I show courtesy to those who were advanced in years. As a teenager, I was impressionable and shy, so I listened. I turned my elders' modest wisdom into dogma.

A close friend of mine, Dave, joined the U.S. Navy. While home over Christmas, I visited his parents. After hearing all about Dave's progress, his father declared, 'Everyone should be required to serve their country for a few years. It's a real man that will fight for the country he loves. The problem with this country is that we're too scared to fight. We're a nation of cowards now.'

I could feel myself frowning, as my holiday cheer was replaced with a tide of anger. A nation of people that realizes that the death of millions of men, women and children in wars has done little to further peace is not a nation of cowards.

I wish I had the nerve to say it, but I had grown up around this man, and always respected his judgment. I put myself in his position. The prime of his life was abruptly interrupted by a maniac like Hitler and by the shock of the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Without question, he joined the fight to defend our country. Living through this would have a profoundly negative impact on someone's view of the world. I let it pass.

Over the summer, I was chatting with an old Italian woman who lives on my block. Every morning, this woman would be outside sweeping her sidewalk for no other reason but to affirm that she was a healthy and capable 75 year-old. As I'd walk by, she'd ask, "Where are you workin'? You workin' hard?" All of her questions revolved around work, nothing else seemed to matter.

Once I mentioned that I was really enjoying college but found my summer job dull and extremely boring. She was unimpressed; in fact, she was quite upset with my opinion on higher education. "That's what's wrong, nobody wants to work. Now everybody wants to learn. The kids make trouble. They never had it so good. When I was your age, we worked all day, if we were lucky enough to find work. We gave all the money to our parents. We were glad just to have food on the table.'

My heart started pounding and my blood racing. Isn't education the foundation of future success? I thought to myself; if you had to work that hard as a kid to survive, you'd be proud of yourself too. Sure you can recite the first paragraph of Rousseau's Social Contract, but you haven't swept your sidewalk in years.

It is hard to resist challenging the beliefs ingrained in the minds of my elders. Setting them straight seems futile considering their ripened sentiments; and arrogant, considering my limited perspective. So I go on listening, frowning, and nodding.

Women's Issues page praised

I would like to commend the Collegian on the improvements it has made in reporting women's issues. The high quality of reporting last semester on issues such as reproductive rights, day care, and the Everywoman's Center budget cuts is a far cry from the past semesters' when the newspaper's coverage of reproductive rights induced fear and loathing in the feminist community.

Articles from the women's issues desk have shown an increased awareness of the complexity of women's issues while at the same time covering a wide range of events and activities. Especially notable has been the work of Maria Sacchetti and Janine Warner. Both women have shown themselves to be insightful and hardworking reporters. The Collegian could use ten more just like them.

I hope that in the future the concerns of women of color will be addressed with just as much excellence. Good luck and keep up the good work.

The Collegian editorial desk is always interested in getting new writers. Anyone who wants to write for the page should come down and talk to Pam, Meredith, or Janine.

FARRAKHAN AND UMASS: FIVE QUESTIONS

Colleges like UMASS are unique in providing an open forum for debating and discussing controversial issues. A group of students, faculty, and community members concerned about Farrakhan's visit have outlined the following frequent questions and basic facts about Farrakhan to assist the student who wants to learn more.

1. Who is Louis Farrakhan?
Louis Farrakhan is a minister and messenger of the Nation of Islam. Many hold that Farrakhan is anti-Jewish, anti-Christian, anti-Asian, anti-White and anti-Blacks who oppose him. On the other hand, his supporters claim that his statements are widely exaggerated by the media. Judge for yourself.

Farrakhan has said:

—That Judaism is a "gutter religion" (NY Times, June 26, 1984). (Nummo of Nov. 16, 1988, states: "the Jews persist in their lies claiming that Farrakhan called Judaism a 'gutter religion' " Nummo then quotes Farrakhan as saying that Jews use "the name of God to shield your dirty religion under his holy and righteous name.")

"Gutter religion" NY Times
"Dirty religion" Nummo

Is there any real difference? Either way, is this the statement of a "distiguished visitor"?

—That "Christians preach love but practice hate and tyranny, use God to cover up their corrupt and dirty practices." (Northeastern University, April 20, 1985)

—That "Death should be the penalty for traitorous activity" for Black leaders who don't support him. (Charlotte [NC] Observer, March 1984)

—That "The germ of murder is already sewed into the hearts of Jews in this country...The Jews talk about 'Never Again.' (reference to the Holocaust) Listen, Jews, this little Black boy is your last chance, because the Scriptures charge you with killing the prophets of God...You cannot say 'Never Again' to God, because when He puts you in the oven, 'Never Again' don't mean a damn thing." (Madison Square Garden, October 1985)

—That "White people, when measured against the tenets of the Koran, are devils. The few white people who are trying to be good are so few and weak that they may as well not exist." (New York Magazine, October 21, 1985)

—That "It is an act of mercy to White people that we end your world...We must end your world and bring in a new world" (Washington Post, March 14, 1985)

—That "Jews, the Arabs, now SE Asian boat people, come into the black community, set up shops, provide goods and services, and nurse at a black breast, and blacks stay in the same position. (Northeastern University, April 20, 1985)

2. Does Farrakhan have the constitutional right to speak at UMASS?
Yes. But UMASS students have the right not to have $9,000 of their Student Activities Trust Fund money spent to sponsor him.

3. Isn't Farrakhan's message of Black power and pride more important than his anti-Semitic and other defamatory comments?
Farrakhan's call for Black pride and economic self-help is crucial to the Black community, and UMASS must sponsor speakers who address these concerns. Farrakhan, however, taints his message with hate. No social group gains pride or dignity by lambasting others. And since hatred of the jews, Christians, Asians, and Blacks who oppose him is a building block of Farrakhan's message, it cannot be separated, or its effect lessened, by his positive statements.

4. What do Black leaders think of Farrakhan?
He has been denounced by Benjamin Hooks, the executive director of the NAACP and John Jacob, head of the National Urban League, among numerous others. Black Muslim leader Wallace Deen Muhammed, furthermore, says that Farrakhan speaks neither for the Islamic religion, as he claims, nor for true Black Muslims. "Islam cannot be anti-White, anti-Semitic, or anti-anything," he told the Advovcate, a national newspaper.

5. What harm can it do to hear Farrakhan speak? I'm curious to hear him speak for himself.
Farrakhan may not say anything blatantly bigoted in his UMASS speech, since he often tones down his message for college audiences. If you walk out of the speech thinking that Farrakhan is "not as bad as people say", realize that you haven't seen the whole Farrakhan. As recently as last May, Farrakhan said: The Jews cannot defeat me. I will grind them and crush them into little bits." (NY Post, May 23, 1988)
It is up to you to educate yourself. Attend the video screening of his anti-Semitic Madison Square Garden speech being shown on Jan. 31, Feb. 1 and 2 at 4 p.m. in campus center room917. Or drop by the Hillel office to talk to someone. Or attend the panels and discussions sponsored by the Office of Human Relations. Many have chosen to protest quietly by participating in the Vigil for Diversity and Dialogue beginning at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Campus Center Auditorium, or by attending "IRINA," the one-woman play that opens the Jewish Arts Festival, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in Bowker.
You don't have to see Farrakhan in person to educate yourself. At one speech he told the audience that their mere attendance showed that "You support me! You support me!" Power lies in numbers, and hearing Farrakhan lends credence to his views. UMASS is a place to learn, but Farrakhan is not the person to educate.

"I find [Farrakhan's statements regarding Jews] to be reprehensible and morally indefensible...I discourage his participation. Neither anti-Semitism or anti-Black statements have any place in our party." (Jesse Jackson, The Boston Herald, June 29, 1984) higher educational institutions had not been rehired this semester.

Fortunately, through use of monies from the trustee's reserve and student fees, UMass avoided losing any part-time faculty, said UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey.
Other measures include:
- Continuing the hiring freeze, in effect since November and continuing through July 1, saving $800,000.
- Energy savings through reduced lighting, heating, early building closures and other measures, saving $350,000.
- Freezing non-unit (non-union employees) merit pay increases until the first of last month and eliminating retroactive merit pay from October, saving $220,000.

The $50 fee, called the "Dukakis surfee" by some administrators, generated some $1.2 million in revenues, of which $300,000 will be used to reimburse students unable to afford the extra fee since the fee must be paid prior to the first day of classes, Langley said.
The remaining $900,000 has been allocated for academic programs and hiring teaching assistants, he said.
According to documents released by the registrars office, 78 percent of all pre-registered students did not receive at least one class because of increased course cancellations.

burglary tools, and the use of a motor vehicle in the commission of a felony.
Hampshire District Court Judge Alvertus J. Morse reduced the charges against the three from two counts of unarmed burglary to two counts of breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony. The lesser charge of breaking and entering will allow the case to remain in District Court rather than being transferred to Superior Court. Charges of unarmed burglary are not in the jurisdiction of District Court.
Brown and Chase were immediately suspended by UMass coach John Calipari and Hardin will not be allowed to play or collect on his full scholarship here pending on the outcome of the case. (See related article in the Sports section.)
Hardin was accepted to UMass as a transfer student from Salt Lake Community College on Jan. 13.

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a $100,000, three-alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"It's a disappointment," he said. "The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. But we'll come out of it. The club will survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the clubhouse during the fire which started at the club's function room at 2 a.m. yesterday, leaving only the shop and a section of the locker room standing, John J. Sheehy said.

NEW BEDFORD — The only airline that runs regular flights from the city to and from Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket plans to withdraw its service in September, but federal law says another airline has to take over before the pullout.

Eastern Express Provincetown-Boston Airlines, owned by Bar Harbor Airways Inc., will begin passenger service at New Bedford Municipal Airport on demand, higher landing fees at Logan International in Boston and Laguardia in New York and the need to refuel, the company announced Thursday.

But the Federal Aviation Administration may not approve the plan.

This means 14 faculty positions in the humanities will not be filled through the 1990 fall semester at least, he said.

The loss of faculty weakens departments, which in turn affects the quality of the education students receive, Schwartz said.

In the division of social and behavioral sciences, Dean Glen Gordon said, there are 12 vacant faculty positions and only one authorized faculty search in effect for an anthropology professor.

Because of the freeze, the remaining unfilled positions will stay vacant until the fall semester at least, he said.

"We need faculty," he said. "If I don't get more faculty, I'll have to have fewer majors."

The budget cuts and hiring freeze can further affect the quality of the University by undermining the morale of remaining faculty and cause them to look elsewhere for more promising jobs, Gordon said.

"We have a lot of people ripe for raiding," he said. "After a couple of years in a row of bad times, you have faculty members looking around for greener pastures."

Fredrick W. Byron Jr., dean of the faculty of natural sciences and mathematics, agrees with Gordon. "Managing in a crisis mode all the time makes people wonder if this is the place they want to be."

The budget cuts will severely curtail Byron's ability to attract quality faculty to his departments, supply needed equipment and keep such departments as computer science competitive, he said.

Depending on the amount of money appropriated to the University in the coming fiscal year, "we're either going to be in a steep slide or we're going to hold on and get back to where we should have been a year ago," Schwartz said.

come to feel must be removed if they are to advance."

By the time Allan Bakke applied to medical school in 1973, and fought the major tenets of affirmative action, Jonathan Kaufman wrote that black-Jewish relations were already near the breaking point.

"Bakke was not Jewish, but his challenge to the concept of affirmative action galvanized the support of prominent Jewish neoconservatives and the three major Jewish organizations (the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress, and the Anti-Defamation League)," he wrote.

"Not all Jews vocally opposed affirmative action, and a good number of Jews as well as some Jewish organizations supported it; but the attack by these intellectuals and organized Jewish groups against affirmative action eliminated any hope of restoring the black-Jewish alliance," wrote Kaufman.

"Black criticism of Israel struck Jews at their most vulnerable point," he added. "It was like a blow to the solar plexus. Similarly, Jewish criticism of affirmative action cut to the heart of the emerging black agenda. It meant attacking not only a key black issue, but also the most articulate and influential members of the black community."

A 1979 article in the Lincoln Review by J.A. Parker and Allan C. Brownfield took a different look at black-Jewish relations at a time when the subject was attracting national attention.

"In some cases, spokesmen for both groups [Blacks and Jews] appear to be using such terms [anti-Semitism and racism] as a means of intimidating those with whom they disagree upon political and economic questions," they wrote.

In the 10 years since that article appeared, more issues have appeared that have divided blacks and Jews, such as the firing of then United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young, the rise and black support of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the presidential candidacy of Jesse Jackson, and most recently, Farrakhan.

The reunification of the two groups is not impossible, according to many black and Jewish leaders, because the two groups still share a common fight against prejudices, and as Village Voice writer Jack Newfield wrote, the groups agree on many economic, social, and foreign policy issues.

Newfield turns to Vernon Jordan, former director of the National Urban League, who said in a speech to the American Jewish Committee: "Together we can rebuild an alliance to help win an open, pluralistic, integrated society. There are blacks who may be too embittered to join it; there are Jews who may be too deficient in both imagination and memory to join it. But the majority of both groups wants to join again in a creative partnership for the common good."

Collegian staff member David R. Mark contributed to this story. Tomorrow: a look at the history of Minister Louis Farrakhan, and his affect on black-Jewish relations.

Arrests rock men's hoop team

Seniors David Brown and Duane Chase suspended

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

On Jan. 3, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team suffered three losses, and the least consequential one was a defeat at the hands of West Virginia University.

Early that morning, two stars of the team, David Brown and Duane Chase, were arrested and charged with the unarmed burglary of an Amherst home.

UMass coach John Calipari suspended the two immediately, and they did not practice, travel with, or play with the Minutemen until their court date last Thursday (see related story, news section).

Arrested with Brown and Chase was George Hardin, a junior college player from Salt Lake Community College in Utah. Hardin was in the process of tranferring to UMass for the spring semester, and would have been eligible to play that night against West Virginia.

To keep the case in Northampton District Court, Hardin's charges were later lessened to breaking and entering.

What Hardin would have represented to the team might never be known. But along with Brown, UMass lost 17.3 points per game and 9 rebounds per game. Chase represented 8.4 ppg and 7.3 rpg.

The losses, however, were much deeper than that.

Brown, the team captain, and Chase were seniors. And when the Minutemen took the court at the Springfield Civic Center against West Virginia, it was obvious they had lost their leadership.

The team went into a skid, losing five games in a row, as players began to take up the slack and re-evaluate their roles.

"This team changed on Jan. 3," Calipari said. "But you just go on. Everyone's roles are more defined and the players are accepting that."

Ironically, it has been the freshmen that have contributed the most. Jim McCoy, a guard, suddenly found himself playing small forward, and responded by winning Atlantic 10 Freshman-of-the-Week honors two weeks in a row.

Minutemen struggle during 4-8 break

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, hampered with the loss of stars David Brown and Duane Chase to suspension, had a difficult intersession, going 4-8 before this issue of the Collegian went to press.

The following is a game-by-game summary of how the Minutemen fared, beginning with the Lowell game, which was played on the final day of classes last semester, after the final issue of the Collegian was published:

UMass 84, Lowell 60

The Minutemen went into intersession on a good note by beating Lowell, last year's Division II national champion.

David Brown had 16 points to pace UMass, which improved to 4-2. Duane Chase added 14 points and 10 rebounds for the Minutemen, who jumped out to a 33-24 halftime lead at the Curry Hicks Cage.

UMass ran away with it in the second half, and the highlight came when David Brown took a pass from Anton Brown and slam dunked the 1,000th point of his UMass career with 8:47 left in the game.

Florida Tech 106, UMass 87

The Minutemen began play in the Florida Today Classic with a loss to the host team, Florida Tech.

Dwight Walton led the winners with 30 points while Kelly Devon added 24, as Florida Tech scored 53 points in each half.

Sophomore guard Rafer Giles led UMass with 20 points, while David Brown added 13 and Jim McCoy had 12.

UMass 90, Coastal Carolina 73

The Minutemen bounced back to beat Coastal Carolina in the consolation game of the tournament.

David Brown had 28 points and nine rebounds to pace UMass, which established a 40-36 halftime lead. Anton Brown added 21 points for the Minutemen, who improved to 5-3 with the victory.

Derek Wilson and Craig Hodges had 14 points each for Coastal Carolina.

West Virginia 89, UMass 73

Less than 24 hours after the arrest and suspension of David Brown and Duane Chase, the Minutemen took the court against Atlantic 10 Conference power West Virginia at the Springfield Civic Center.

Despite 32 points from freshman Jim McCoy in his first game as a small forward, the Minutemen lost.

The Mountaineers, who raced to a 43-29 halftime lead, had five players in double figures, led by Herbie Brooks with 21.

Penn State 107, UMass 79

The absence of David Brown and Duane Chase was never more evident than in the thrashing Penn State gave the Minutemen in State College, Pa.

Tom Hovasse, the leading scorer in the Atlantic 10 Conference, had 22 points to lead the Nittany Lions, who exploded for 67 second-half points.

Minutewomen hit rough road over break

After 5-0 start, women's basketball team slips to 8-7 overall

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

When last we left the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, first-year coach Kathy Hewelt's troops were an unblemished 5-0, filled with optimism.

However, the goings weren't as easy during the intersession as they were before. The Minutewomen stumbled in the Bath Ironworks Classic in Portland, ME and then headed into Atlantic 10 play. After the perfect start, the Minutewomen have gone 3-7, including a 3-4 record in conference play.

"We knew coming in that we'd have a difficult time in the Atlantic 10, with the caliber of the teams and the depths of the programs," Hewelt said. "But the kids have their heads up, we're going in and battling. Whatever we have, we're giving.

"I feel that if we stay competitive, and keep our enthusiasm as we go through the growing process we'll be in good shape," Hewelt said. "Playing better teams will help us in the long run."

Yet at this point in the season, although the effort of the team is to be lauded, the bottom line is that the team is not winning consistently.

"The toughest part is even though we know we're playing great competition, losing is not OK," Hewelt said. "There's a lot of room for improvement. We have to really dig in if we're going to turn the corner."

The Minutewomen have been hampered by the loss of starting guard Michele Pytko, who injured her knee late in the consolation game of the Bath Ironworks Classic in Portland, ME. The junior had surgery a couple of weeks ago and is lost for the season.

"Any time you lose a player of Michele's athletic ability, it hurts, and it shows on the floor," Hewelt said. "We've had to adjust to not having her."

UMass has made some strides in recent games, winning a pair of conference games before tough losses to strong teams such as West Virginia and Dartmouth. Part of the reason could be a gamble made by Hewelt before the Duquesne game, switching Beth Wilbor to outside and moving Sue Serafini, who took Pytko's spot in the lineup, inside.

Serafini has responded by playing better than she has, and it has helped the rest of the team as well, taking a load off of inside players Keyburn McCusker and Helen Freeman.

"We feel we can take advantage of this. Sue has found a lot of confidence, and Keyburn has played a lot better. It gives us several diiferent options," Hewelt said. "Sue plays well down under, and other teams have difficulty matching, because now they can't double our other players. She boards well, jumps and sets good screens.

Hewelt has been switching the two on and off, mostly to confuse teams during the game.

"We're looking to get some quick scores, cause some difficulty and maybe get some quick fouls. It gives us a new look," Hewelt said.

The following is a look at the intersession action, game by game:

Maine 76, UMass 62:

December 28, Bath Ironworks Classic, Portland, ME.

The Minutewomen, looking to equal the school mark for most wins from the start of the season at six, instead dropped their first of the year to the host team in the first round of the tournament.

"We played pretty well against a good team in Maine. They played pretty well," Hewelt said. "It was our first outing after a long layoff, and we had problems with our timing and we got out of synch, which cost us."

UMass trailed 35-30 at the half and fell further behind in the second half, shooting only 35 percent from the floor for the game.

Helen Freeman and the Minutewomen found the road tougher once the Atlantic 10 schedule started.

Rachel Bouchard was the leading scorer with 21 points for the Black Bears. Senior guard Christel Zullo led UMass with 17 points, six assists and five steals.

Georgia State 76, UMass 65:

December 29, Bath Ironworks Consolation Game

The story in this game was played out on the boards, UMass almost getting outrebounded by one player.

Forward Angela Greshman haunted the Minutewomen with 24 total rebounds, including nine off the offensive board, while UMass as a team had only 28. Georgia State had 47 total karoms.

"They are an extremely talented team. I felt we played them extremely well, but they were head and shoulders above us at every position," Hewelt said. "(Greshman) really hurt us. She's a tremendous athlete. We tried to Times they are a-changing atop the Atlantic 10 conference in women's basketball.

For the past few years, it has been Rutgers University that has consistently been the dominant team in the conference, with several others on their heels. But this season has shown a shift of power, with St. Joseph's University and Temple now battling for the top spot, and Rutgers, Penn State, West Virginia and George Washington just an eyelash away.

Things could get interesting before the year is out. Through games of Jan. 23, St. Joe's held court with a

Navy torpedoes men's gymnastics team

Minutemen perform 'admiral'ably in opener

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Things can only get better for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastic team after their 261.60-258.1 loss to the Naval Academy on Jan. 14.

Based on last year's results in which the Midshipmen were the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League champions and a preseason meet in which Navy beat all of its eastern competition, the midshipmen look to be the toughest opponent on UMass' schedule.

It might have been a tall order for UMass to fill, going down to Annapolis, Md. and beating Navy in its own gym, but the chance was there and it slipped away from UMass.

It was the first meet of the year for the Minutemen so they were not in top form but if they could have executed just a little better on the pommel horse and the still rings, they could have pulled this one out.

"We would have liked to have a little better start and I think if we hit our pommel horse better we would have beat them," UMass coach Ron Johnson said. "We didn't hit the pommel horse and rings well and that's where we could have taken the meet."

UMass had jumped out to an early lead with a good performance in the floor exercise where they grabbed a 44.85-41.70 lead despite the first place finish of Navy's Steve Parker, who posted a 9.35.

For UMass, freshman Calvin Booker finished second with a 9.0 and senior co-captain John Eggers third with a 8.9. Booker went on to win the all-around competition against one of the top teams in the east in this, his first collegiate meet of his career. And Johnson has even higher expectations of this freshman from Dorchester.

"That was a nice surprise," Johnson said. "I thought he did real well. I think he can even do better. He had a fall on pommel horse and a fall on horizontal bar."

Though Johnson felt the Minutemen still could have performed better, UMass ended up edging Navy in the pommel horse competition and extending its lead as 10.50-10, thanks in part to senior Joe Fitzgerald (8.6) who took home the only first place of the afternoon for the Minutemen.

But that one point lead did not last very long. The next event of the evening was the still rings and that is where the Midshipmen took over.

Navy took the first two places in the rings (an area where UMass was hurt by graduation) with Mark Fiori (9.4) taking first and Steve Parker (9.25) edging out Eggers (9.2) for second place.

The Minutemen got consistently high scores in the vault competition, everyone posting high 8's and senior Jay Ronayne a 9.1. But Navy was just a little bit better, outscoring UMass 44.7-43.95 to up its lead, 172.7-171.35.

Ronayne was second for the Minutemen behind Navy's Jason Carter who received a 9.15 from the judges for his vault.

Navy put this meet virtually out of reach for UMass with a superior performance on the parallel bars, an event that Johnson felt the Minutemen were weak in to begin with.

The Midshipmen were not weak on the p-bars, not at all. Navy got three excellent performances to sweep the first three

Despite obstacles, Minutewomen win first 2

Injury to Turmail vaults teammates into starring roles

By SAM SILVERSTEIN

Forty-eight hours before the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team's season-opening meet at Navy, team high scorer Kristin Turmail slipped on some ice and broke her foot. The squad's meet hopes for a record-breaking campaign could have gone down with her.

Instead, the Minutewomen rallied behind the strong performances of Erika Baxter and Kim Grady to score 175.05 in their first meet of the winter, outpacing their hosts by more than 40 points. A week later, UMass returned to Boston and downed the University of Rhode Island 177.45 to 171.6, their first win in four years against the Ocean State rivals.

"They showed me that mentally, they are ready for the challenge. Nobody gave up," explained first-year head coach Alfie Mitchell. "They understood going into it that in order to accomplish what they wanted to do this year, they would have to do it without counting on Kristin all the time. It's a balanced team.

"Of course we miss her," added freshman Erin Klier-Gydyk. "But it's nice to know that we can still pull it out."

That balance proved to be the difference against the visiting Wildcats, who needed a high-scoring performance from Lan Inlardone to keep pace. Her 36.5, stood as the highest all-around total of the afternoon. As a team, UMass notched at least 40 points in each event, scoring highest in the floor exercise (44.75 total) followed by 44.2's in both the vault and balance beam. Though the uneven bars provided the most trouble on the afternoon for the Minutewomen (40.1 pts), it was there that they opened up a little daylight over Rhode Island, who could manage just 38.55 points.

Individually, three different Minutewomen emerged in the four seperate events against Rhode Island. In the vault, Lagendyk led UMass with a 8.95. Baxter's 8.35 was tops for the meet on the uneven bars, and her 9.3 on the floor exercise was the team high as well. On the balance beam, Junior Lynne Morris delivered a 9.3, followed closely by Grady's 9.15.

At Navy, a similarly even performance paced the Minutewomen to the blowout win. Lagendyk led the vault effort there as well, recording a 9.20 to christen her UMass career. Baxter added a team high 9.2 in the floor exercise, and her 35.5 all around pt. total was tops in the gym. Grady took second place all-around with a 34.75, and Klier chipped in 34.1 points in all four events.

Nothing rookie-like about these UMass freshman

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics head coach, Alfie Mitchell may be a rookie, feeling his way around both Boyden and the regional women's gymnastics scene for the first time this winter, but he's got plenty of company. Six freshmen suit up for Mitchell's squad during practice, and so far this season, the new faces have played a major role in the Minutewomen's season-opening wins over Navy and Rhode Island.

Freshmen Kim Grady, Erin Klier, Michelle Demeo, Julie Kantarjis and Elma Lagendyk have all contributed, with Grady and Klier quickly establishing themselves as heavy all-around scoring threats.

Against Rhode Island, Grady's 35.1 pt. total was the third-over all, Klier totaled an impressive 33.2. With traditional high scorer Kristin Turmail out indefinitely with a bad ankle, these fat scores have come in more than handy.

"I was planning on using the freshmen a lot, but I didn't know how soon. As it turns out it happened earlier than I expected," said Mitchell. "I was counting on them, and they haven't let me down. Since this is my first year, these are going to be the people that I will have to deal with."

"They have worked out really well since September," agreed team captian Enya Hlozik. "We knew they would be a big part of this team."

Both Grady and Klier were both tabbed as All-Scholastic calibre gymnasts in high school by the Boston Globe, and have quickly transferred their all-around talents to the collegiate level. Grady has performed especially well on the vault and floor exercises, where Mitchell described her as "explosive" earlier this season.

"The best is yet to come from Kim Grady," said Mitchell after the Rhode Island meet. "Each week she improves something."

"I put pressure on myself to work hard, but everybody on this team works hard," answered Grady.

Said Mitchell, "I can honestly say that I think they are welcoming the pressure. They wanted to prove themselves, and this (without Turmail) is the time to do it. They're going to have to get their act together a little bit sooner, without that grace period most freshmen get to mature."

Men's swimming back to its winning ways

The UMass men's swim team has started a new streak, now at seven after four wins over the break.

Swimmers win 7 straight

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Don't look now, but the University of Massachusetts men's swim team is on another winning streak.

OK, seven meets is not quite the equivalent of the 41-meet monstrosity that the Minutemen piled up over parts of four seasons, but it's a modest one in itself.

The Minutemen, since dropping a season-opening loss to Boston College that snapped that 41-meet string, have taken seven straight, including four in a row over intersession, to improve to 7-1 on the year and set a course to potentially capture a third straight New England Championship later next month.

"Swimming and winning are going together again now," said coach Russ Yarworth. "We're pointing to a rematch with BC at the New Englands."

UMass also swam against Connecticut and Vermont, but results were not available before deadline.

Highlighting the intersession proceedings was junior diver Dan Chesnicka's double win against Rhode Island, off both the one- and three-meter boards, both of which established new school and pool records.

Starting the break at 3-1, UMass got back into the swing of things on Jan. 7, a 147-92 win at Northeastern. Chesnicka was the lone double winner, while UMass captured both the 400 medley and 400 freestyle relays. Jim Robertson, Roger Kennedy, Evan Gwilliam and Brian McIver each took one first.

The next meet was a visit to crosstown rival Amherst College, the Minutemen stealing bragging rights again with a 171-66 win. UMass captured firsts in all but two

Women's swimming goes 1-3 over break

Coach says UMass still making gains

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The record will state that the University of Massachusetts women's swim team lost three of four dual meets over intersession. But records don't always tell the true story, and coach Bob Newcomb insists "we haven't lost anything over intersession."

With the 1-3 break mark, the team now stands at 5-4 on the year, but Newcomb feels that he has never seen his team swimming better than it is now, and says he is having more fun than he has ever had coaching at UMass.

"The only disappointing thing has been the record," Newcomb said. He has plenty of reason to be encouraged. Take 23 personal bests against both Boston College and Buffalo, although the Minutewomen lost both. Because of that, Newcomb feels that the future bodes well for his team come time for the New England meet.

"If we can keep a few people healthy, I would say people will have to watch out for us. They'll have to swim fast to keep us out of third," Newcomb said. "Third is a very realistic goal. Maine had better watch their back door."

Coming into the season, UMass had pretty much conceded first and second in the New Englands to Northeastern and Boston College. Maine was picked third and UMass fourth, the exact order of finish for last year's meet. But Newcomb feels that there may be a little jostling of position this time around.

The intersession started against Northeastern, currently the top team in New England. UMass had only been in the water for five days since coming back from break, and didn't have much to offer against the powerful Huskies in a 174-119 loss.

"This was a tough meet against a really tough team. We were really tired, and we still had to work out our vacation laziness," Newcomb said. "On the whole we swam some solid races."

Despite the loss, the Minutewomen were boosted by the return of Michelle Leary, who had suffered a mild heart attack before the season started. Leary has bounced back perfectly and is currently swimming some of the top times in New England.

"This was our first welcome back, a 'let's get in the swing of things.' It wasn't anything compared to the next three meets," Newcomb said.

The next meet was the only win UMass would get, a 185-115 decision over Williams College. UMass took first and second in the opening medley relay and never looked back.

"We took it right to them from the beginning and swam very well," Newcomb said.

Leary highlighted the meet by winning four events, while Megan McCamy was also a double winner. Freshman Tracy Young captured the 1000-yard freestyle and Jodi Schwartz took the 200-yard butterfly. Both breaststrokers, Regina Jungbluth and Melissa Waller also had

Men's track set for future

O'Brien pleased with performances of freshmen

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

This may not be the year for the University of Massachusetts indoor track team . . . but next year or possibly the next, might be.

The Minutemen are a relatively young team and though it is good to have some young legs in any lineup, it is also important to have some experience.

UMass' roster fields 27 freshmen in a 59-man lineup which means the freshmen will be depended on to carry some responsibility. UMass coach Ken O'Brien has recruited well and he expects that to pay off, though maybe not in the immediate future.

"Before the season I didn't know where we were but I guessed we were going to be a pretty strong team this season," O'Brien said. "I don't think we'll reach the level I anticipated for us but that does not discourage me because I think we have more promise for the future than I thought we had. I think the kids have a good attitude but its going to take some time."

Potential is what O'Brien is talking about. And he's seen some over the break in two meets, each of which fielded over 50 teams from around the Northeast.

At the Yale Invitational on January 14th the Minutemen left their mark in the relay competition. Both the two-mile and distance medley teams finished a very respectable seventh.

Senior James McDonnell started things off for the Minutemen in the medley with a 3:09.2 three-quarter mile. He handed off to freshman Steve Brown of Rockland who took care of the quarter mile leg with a 51.7. Derek Moore of Brockton, another freshman, was next up for the Minutemen and he set things up for junior Art Smith by running a 2:01.2 half-mile. Smith went on to finish the medley up for the Minutemen with a 4:21.7 mile time.

Four veterans combined for a 8:10.1 two-mile relay. Juniors Herb Heffner and Tom Degnan ran the first two half-mile legs of the race, Heffner starting things off with a 2:00.1 and Degnan a 2:01.4. Senior Fitzpatrick Hagan followed with a 2:01.8 and David Doyle was the No. 4 man with a 2:06.8.

In the mile relay, UMass was paced by three freshmen and finished fourth in New England behind Southern Connecticut University, Yale and Central Connecticut. Freshman Stephen Doran (54.6), senior Evon Walters (54.8), freshman Joseph Sherwin (55.3), and freshman Felix DeLaRosa (53.8), combined for a 3:38.5.

Individually, juniors Gerry Squires and Art Smith were the highlights of the afternoon for the Minutemen. Squires' 15:17.94 was fourth best in the 5000-meter race. Smith finished second in New England in the 3000-meters with a time of 8:21.7.

Six qualify for N.E. race

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

"Over there, Over there, We won't come home until it's over Over there . . ."; the famous World War two fight song is an appropriate medley for the University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team, which doesn't have even a single home meet.

All of the Minutewomen's meets are on the road and, unlike most other competitions, are non-scoring — individual performances aren't tallied for a team total. Instead, members of the UMass track team run with the hope of qualifying for the New England Championships, held in the last week of February. So far, the Minutewomen have accumulated an impressive number of qualifying performances.

In its two meets over intersession break (at Yale and then Harvard University the following week) UMass' Michelle St. Laurent ran the half-mile in 2:20 — one second better than the qualifying time for the N.E. Championships; LeeAnn Ambrose qualified in the 400 meter race; freshman Precious Hill topped the championship qualifying time by more than seven seconds by running a mile in five minutes flat.

Kristen Peers qualified in the 5,000-meter race with a time of 18:37. The Minutewomen also qualified both of their relay teams. The 4x4 one-mile relay team qualified by better than five seconds in 4:04, while the 4x8 two-mile team had a qualified in 9:51.

Where the Minutewomen haven't qualified is in the shot put. The championship qualifying distance is 38 feet for the 4 kilogram shot, UMass' Helen Balaouras has thrown 35' 1"; while freshman teamate Dianne Ozzoleck has the 20-pound weight for 29' 8".

"They're close to qualifying," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said.

Parity takes over in Atlantic 10

TV exposure on the rise

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

Week Eight: The University of Massachusetts is 10 games into its conference schedule and glancing at the standings you see A) the Minutemen only have two conference wins, but B) with the loss of two seniors, a still-new coach, and the lowest of possible expectations for UMass, the Minutemen have paddled a shakey ship through turbulant waters.

UMass can claim victory when saying "at least we're not in last place" . . . or even second to last.

In its first 10 A-10 games the Minutemen find themselves in eighth place with a 2-8 [Deadline keeps us from knowing the outcome of Saturday's Rutgers game].

By last year's standards, the Atlantic 10 is having a down year— Temple actually has a conference loss and has played dismal on national television; but by other standards the Atlantic 10 has (at least in the upper echelon) that rare flavor— Parity.

Either you hate it or you love it. No in-between. The A-10 has lost its dominating, nationally-ranked Cinderallas. On a whole, however, conference teams are playing the toughest schedule in leauge history and in front of a larger audience. Since Dec. 17, there have been 23 Atlantic 10 games on television.

The Minutemen split in their two television appearances, losing to St. Bonaventure University and then beating Rhode Island at home.

Across the Atlantic 10 . . .

Temple: (8-6) The Owls suffered their first conference loss in 31 games on Jan. 21, losing to the Mountaineers of West Virginia 65-63.

Although in second place in the conference, Temple has found life outside of the A-10 brutal. The Owls have been humiliated on television by Villanova and North Carolina State.

The Owls have already swept both of their regular season games with UMass. In the two games, Temple has beaten the Minutemen by a combined total of 48 points.

West Virginia: (13-2) The Mountaineers are in first

McCoy took over the scoring lead from Brown, and as of early last week, averaged almost 18 points per game.

"I had to sit down and mature a lot faster than I thought I would," McCoy said. "I had to change positions and that meant a lot more responsibilities."

But McCoy handled the responsibilities well, as did freshman point guard Anton Brown, who scores more than 12 points a game, and leads the team in assists.

Six-foot-seven sophomore John Tate became the big man, and averages about eight rebounds a game.

"I had to grow and mature as far as my personal role on the team," Tate said. "I had to step up and take a lot more responsibility."

For some of the Minutemen, the loss of David Brown and Chase meant something more basic than added responsibility — it meant a chance to play.

Players like John Milum and Ishmael Butler saw their minutes — and their statistics — grow.

"I'm getting the opportunity to play more and, in that time, I'm just asked to maintain it," Butler said. "Everybody just plays hard. The cohesiveness was always there, now we're quite a bit tighter."

That was evident as the Minutemen lost by smaller and smaller margins and then finally won, beating St. Bonaventure University Jan. 16 at the Curry Hicks Cage. UMass left the court to a standing ovation.

Three nights later, the Minutemen beat the University of Rhode Island for their second Atlantic 10 win.

UMass slumped again, though, losing to George Washington University and Temple before this issue of the Collegian went to press.

The loss of David Brown and Chase put the Minutemen in a position where they could have easily given up on the season.

But they've done just the opposite. They have worked harder than they probably would have in any other situation, and as a result, the players have grown.

"I'm happy with taking on a new role and everything," Tate said. "But I miss those guys. . ."

McCoy and Brown: two 'fresh' players

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

In my Christmas "Wish List" before intersession I asked Santa Claus that if freshman basketball sensations Jim McCoy and Anton Brown had younger brothers to "please let them also want to come to UMass."

Simply, McCoy and Brown have dominated the Atlantic 10 so thoroughly this year, UMass can only hope there is more where they are from.

Sure, Temple's Mark Macon dominated the A-10, and even the NCAA, last year but as a tandem, McCoy and Brown are rewriting the conference record books. Between them, McCoy and Brown have taken four of the last five Atlantic 10-Freshman-of-the-week honors.

McCoy had 25 points in a losing effort for UMass, which had just 26 rebounds in the game.

St. Bonaventure 74, UMass 70

The Minutemen had a strong second half in Olean, N.Y., but fell just short of getting their first conference win of the season.

UMass pulled within two, 72-70 on a Jim McCoy basket with two seconds left, but Michael Burnett made two free throws a second later to clinch it.

Rafer Giles had 22 points in the first half for UMass, but missed most of the second half because of a stomach virus. Jim McCoy added 17 points.

Burnett led the Bonnies with 21 points.

Temple 89, UMass 68

Five players scored in double figures as Temple had an easy time with the Minutemen at the Springfield Civic Center.

Mike Vreeswyk and Mark Macon had 18 points each to lead the Owls, who remained undefeated in conference play. Ernest Pollard added 16 for Temple, which led 48-29 at the half.

Rafer Giles had six three-pointers in the second half and finished with 20 points for UMass. Jim McCoy added 17 points.

Duquesne 88, UMass 84

Duquesne outscored the Minutemen 17-6 over the last 4:09 to come from behind and win at the Cage.

UMass led 78-71 with 4:23 left, but the Dukes came back and eventually built a four-point lead with 20 seconds left. An Ishmael Butler basket pulled UMass within two with 13 seconds remaining, but Brian Anselmino answered with a hoop for Duquesne.

Arnd Neuhaus and Darrell White led the Dukes with 20 points each.

Jim McCoy powered the Minutemen with 29.

UMass 92, St. Bonaventure 84

Finally, in their seventh try, the Minutemen got their first Atlantic 10 win, beating St. Bonaventure at the Cage.

UMass dominated the first half while building a 39-17 lead, then survived a second half in which the Bonnies scored 67 points.

St. Bonaventure went on an 18-5 run late in the game, and pulled within eight, 83-75, with 1:28 left, but the Minutemen held on.

Anton Brown led UMass with 25 points, while Jim McCoy added 23 points and John Tate contributed 17 points. McCoy and Tate had 10 rebounds each.

Rocky Llewellyn was high scorer for the Bonnies with 22 points, and Michael Burnett added 19.

UMass 76, Rhode Island 71

The Minutemen showed definite signs of coming together as a team, and held Rhode Island scoreless for a stretch of 8:04 at the end of the first half and the beginning of the second on the way to this win at the Cage.

UMass broke a 46-46 tie on a pair of three-pointers by Anton Brown and Jim McCoy. Moments later, UMass went on a 6-0 run to pull away, and the Rams never got closer than three the rest of the way.

McCoy finished with 21 points to lead UMass, while Brown added 15 points, and Tate contributed 11 points and 12 rebounds.

For Rhode Island, John Evans had 21 points.

George Washington 103, UMass 77

The Minutemen traveled to Washington D.C. only to become the first victims of George Washington University.

The Colonials trailed 40-39 at halftime, and were behind by four, 56-52, with 15:44 left, but exploded for 64 second-half points to pick up their first win of the season.

Freshman center Clint Holtz scored 23 points and pulled down 10 rebounds to lead George Washington.

Jim McCoy led UMass with 20 points while Rafer Giles, with a 5-for-7 effort from three-point land, scored 18 points.

Temple 93, UMass 66

Sophomore Mark Macon scored 21 points, including the 1,000th of his career, as Temple beat the Minutemen in Philadelphia.

UMass, which trailed by 14 at halftime, pulled within nine, 50-41, early in the second half, but the Owls went on a 15-5 run to pull away.

Rafer Giles led the Minutemen with 18 points, Jim McCoy added 15 points, and John Tate contributed 13 points and 10 rebounds.

block her out, but she's so quick."

San Kegler led GS with 19 points, followed by Malynda Carruth with 16 and Greshman with 15. Zullo paced the Minutewomen with 15.

But UMass suffered a more significant loss when Pytko went down late in the game with an injured left knee.

UMass 68, Rhode Island 58:
January 3, Kingston, RI.

Entering Atlantic 10 conference play, the Minutewomen snap their two-game loss skein with a win over the WRams. The Minutewomen run out to a 42-30 halftime lead and hold the hosts off, limiting them to 34 percent shooting from the floor.

"We played well. Our inside kids came out and played hard. It was a big road win," Hewelt said.

McCusker leads all scorers with 20 points, connecting on 9-of-10 shots. Junior center Helen Freeman adds 18 points and 15 rebounds to the cause. Diane Boshart led the WRams with 14 points.

Geo. Washington 74, UMass 54:

The Minutewomen connect on just 9-of-25 first half shots as the Colonial Women took a 35-21 halftime lead and coasted to an A-10 win.

Karin Vadelund led GW with 23 points and Ginny Doyle added 18 for the Colonial Women. Wilbor's 15 points led UMass.

Temple 84, UMass 70:
January 7, Curry Hicks Cage

The Minutewomen drop another game to what has become one of the top teams in the conference. The quick-moving Owls capitalized on 18 UMass turnovers and dished out 24 assists.

"Both Temple and GW are very solid. They're much improved over last year," Hewelt said.

Guard Pam Balogh led the Owls with 18 points, followed by Karen Healey and freshman Kelly Wickes with 14 each. Zullo's 21 points led UMass. The Minutewomen shot 55 percent from the floor, but attempted only 45 shots compared to 83 for Temple.

Penn State 79, UMass 50:
January 12, State College, PA.

Very rarely will a team win when it spots the opponent a 27-point lead. Such was the case against the always-tough Lady Lions, who used the head start to build a 45-18 lead at the half. UMass hit for just 20 percent from the floor in the first 20 minutes.

"We did not respond well. We tried to calm down and play within ourselves," Hewelt said. "In the second half we outscored them, I was pleased with that. We didn't fold and we came back battling, but with such a big deficit from the opening tip, we couldn't do it."

Freshman Susan Robinson dropped in 29 points for the Lady Lions and pulled down 15 rebounds. UMass was led by Zullo's 20 points.

UMass 75, St. Bonaventure 66:
January 14, Olean, NY.

After four players were caught breaking team curfew, UMass started four bench players and spotted the Bonnies a 14-point lead. This time, however, the Minutewomen were able to regroup and after trailing 38-36 at the half, bounced back for the win, snapping a three-game losing slump.

"It was a great win on the road, we responded very well," Hewelt said. "It was nice to see us bounce back. We don't stay down for too long. We went in an 18-4 hole, but it was a great experience for our younger players. Then the starters came back, chipped away and then took the game over in the second half."

Wilbor and Freeman each had great games off the bench, with 22 and 20 points respectively. Freshman Sue Shay scorched the Minutewomen for 30, and long-ranger Roni Hergenroeder added 16 for the Bonnies.

UMass 88, Duquesne 74:
January 19, Curry Hicks Cage

UMass won its second straight conference tilt, pulling away from a close halftime game for the win.

"This was a good win. I felt we came out and did some things that we needed to do," Hewelt said.

The key would be the Wilbor-Serafini switch and the move paid off, as Serafini responded with one of her best games as a collegiate player, scoring 15 points.

Wilbor also benefitted with a team-high 20, while Freeman added 19 and Zullo 16. Kathy Ridilla had 24 and Katie Collins 23 for the Duchesses, who were playing without the services of leading scorer Amy Alger.

West Virginia 72, UMass 64:
January 21, Curry Hicks Cage

UMass played strong against a tough Mountaineer squad, only to fall in the end.

The Minutewomen were within two points of the 11-3 Mountaineers, 33-31 at the half, but West Virginia was able to hold UMass off.

"We played very well against a very good team. We were close in the end and could have won, but we're not used to that," Hewelt said. "Our execution suffered and we made some bad decisions, but we really battled a super team."

Jenny Hillen led WVU with 21 points as leading scorer Judy Eaton was out of action. Freeman had 21 points and Serafini 17 for the Minutewomen.

Dartmouth 73, UMass 60:
January 23, Hanover, NH.

Dartmouth scored the first nine points of the game and UMass fell behind by as much as 19 in the second half, but made a late run before the Big Green hit the key foul shots down the stretch to seal the win.

"They came out with a lot of intensity and pressed. We got in foul trouble inside," Hewelt said. "We had a chance to turn it around. We just need one or two breaks to fall our way."

Wilbor, Zullo and McCusker each had 13 points to lead the Minutewomen.

7-0 conference record, with Penn State just a half game out at 6-0. Both teams have already knocked off Rutgers this year, proving that new things are on the horizon in the conference. However, for the first time in a long while, there is no A-10 team in the Associated Press Top 20 poll, Rutgers falling out after the St. Joe's loss.

The University of Massachusetts currently sits seventh in the conference, but has proven itself competitive. The team was 3-4, heading into a tough road pair with Rutgers and St. Joe's.

St. Joe's — 7-0 (12-2 overall): The Lady Hawks have been led by Dale Hodges, leading the conference with a 26.25 points per game average. Senior center Kim Foley sits fourth in scoring and sixth in rebounding. Jim Foster's club showed its mettle with a 78-63 win over Rutgers.

Temple — 6-0 (10-3 overall): Coach Linda McDonald has her team playing as well as any, evidenced by a huge 80-53 win over perennial power Penn State. The team has been sparked by the play of guard tandem Karen Healey and Pam Balogh.

Rutgers — 4-2 (9-4 overall): The Knights have been hurt by the extended losses of Telicher Austin and Missy Lender to injuries, but are still one of the dominant teams around. Austin is third in scoring, while Vicki Picott is fourth in rebounding.

Penn State — 4-3 (6-9 overall): Not the same team without All-American guard Suzie McConnell, who was lost to graduation. But coach Rene Portland still has amassed a strong team that is capable of beating anyone.

West Virginia — 4-2 (11-3 overall): The Mountaineers are currently without leading scorer Judy Eaton, but when healthy have a strong starting five that may be ready to make the move up.

George Washington — 3-4 (5-10 overall): The Colonial Women still have problems with the big teams, losing 71-49 to Rutgers, but are still improving.

Rhode Island — 1-6 (3-13 overall): The WRams have slid since last year, but still have the experienced Val Gorman up front.

Duquesne — 1-5 (4-9 overall): The Duchesses took their first conference win from Rhode Island, but are hurt without the services of leading scorer Amy Alger, out with an ankle injury.

St. Bonaventure — 0-7 (7-9 overall): The Lady Bonnies are still struggling for respectability in the conference, although they have impressed outside. Freshman Sue Shay has been the spark, with sophomore Roni Hergenroeder hitting from outside.

events and got double wins out of Chesnicka and G.T. Ladd, as well as a sweep of the relays.

McIver, Kennedy, Mike Yunker, Dave Ehle and Will Riddell all took single firsts.

In a 151-92 win over Williams College, UMass got double wins from Robertson and McIver, and firsts and thirds in both relays. Kennedy, Chesnicka and Frank Sampson also won events.

Finally, The Minutemen returned home to Boyden for a convincing 151.5-91.5 win over Rhode Island, highlighted by Chesnicka's rewrite of the record book. On the one-meter board, he scored a 288.70 and then topped that with a 295.30 off the three-meter height.

Earlier in the break, Chesnicka qualified for the Nationals with a double win at the Northeastern Invitational Diving Meet.

Ladd was also a double winner, while Robertson, McIver, Kennedy and Sampson all took firsts.

"We worked really hard and put in a lot of quality training and a lot of hours in the pool," Yarworth said. "We've showed real good consistency and attitude."

Several swimmers lived up to their usual billing, while Yarworth had praise for others who exceeded early expectations.

"I'm encouraged by the emergence of Frank Sampson as an all-around swimmer. I can put him in most events and get a good swim. He's been really super in the 1000 free," Yarworth said.

Robertson, a sophomore, has risen to join the top forces of the team.

"Jim Robertson has continued his improvement. He'll be a force at the New Englands," Yarworth said. "Peter Koback has come around in the breaststroke, and McIver, Ladd and Kennedy have been doing great."

Yarworth has also been encouraged by his freshmen, to whom he will look for good things down the stretch.

"Mike Yunker has been doing nicely as a middle distance freestyler," Yarworth said.

He is also high on Sean Rutherford, a swimmer whom he compared to Anthony Nesti, who surprisingly beat out American Matt Biondi in the 100-yard butterfly in the Olympics.

"His 100 fly is scary. He could be our favorite at the New Englands," Yarworth said. "He's improved in leaps and bounds."

With the team swimming as well as Yarworth has expected, he's looking forward to a repeat performance at the New Englands, as well as a shot of revenge at the Eagles of BC.

"We're confident we'll swim well at the New Englands. But we might not be able to make mistakes and get away with them like we did last year," Yarworth said. "We'll have to work hard in every event."

The team has remaining dual meets with New Hampshire and Boston University, a team that the Minutemen beat by one point in the last race of the meet here last year

ed out to be one of the biggest track meets in New England in quite some time, the New England TAC championships at Harvard University.

The competition was deep at Cambridge on that weekend with former Olympians Sydney Maree (3000-meters) and Villanova's Vicki Huber (mile) setting meet records. But nonetheless, UMass held its own on the strength of three freshman.

Brown entered the 500-meter race for the first time in his college career and finished seventh with a time of 1:05.2. That place, however may be a little deceiving on the outside. To put things in perspective, Brown's time was good enough to qualify him for the New England Championships and the biggest meet of the year, the IC4A's which will be held in March.

Another freshman, Kevin Walter, finished fifth in the 60-yard dash. His time of 6.3 in the semifinal heat also qualified him for the New Englands.

places in that event and give the Midshipmen a nice cushion going into the high bar, the last event of the meet.

Mark Burgess (9.1), Lenny Reed (8.9), and Fiori (8.9) went 1-2-3 on the parallels to give Navy a 217.15-214.25 advantage.

Burgess, who would finish second in the all-around competition behind Booker went on to swing his way to a 9.4 and win the high bar competition. Teammate Gerry Haran finished a close second for Navy, registering a 9.35. Eggers and Ronayne shared third, each scoring 9.2.

Prop 42, will the motion make the grade?

Georgetown University coach John Thompson walked off the court during a game, one of many people to protest the new Proposal 42 laid down by the NCAA.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Everyone loves to pick on college athletes. Many a joke has circulated about how a dumb jock can go on playing a sport, cutting classes and getting away with it, just because he/she has the talent to do so.

In 1983, the NCAA tried to put a mute on these things just a bit by passing what has been commonly known as Proposition 48. This policy requires all incoming freshmen to achieve either a 2.0 grade point average while passing at least 11 academic classes, or to get a total score of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Any entering freshman athlete who failed to live up to either of these standards is forced to sit out a year, in effect also losing a year of eligibility, while still attending school on scholarship.

Two weeks ago, at the NCAA Convention in San Francisco, a new and improved model was passed by the nation's schools. This one, called Proposal 42, in effect prevented those same students from getting those guaranteed scholarships for the time they are sitting out. This latest legislation has had several prominent figures in the world of college athletics crying foul.

The most famous of these is John Thompson, basketball coach at Georgetown University. Thompson, a black, feels that the new rule adversely affects those from poorer backgrounds who cannot afford a good elementary and secondary education. Thus, Thompson feels the whole thing is racially slanted.

As a result, Thompson protested the new rule by walking out of the Capital Centre just as his Hoyas were getting ready to face Boston College. Thompson continued his boycott later in the week against Providence, both wins for Georgetown.

Another coach who has taken issue with the rule is Temple's John Chaney. Also black, Chaney had a chance to air his opinion after a recent Temple-UMass game at the Springfield Civic Center one day after the new rule was passed by a narrow margin.

"It's racism," Chaney said bluntly. "The ad hoc committee that came up with Proposition 48 was a group of 40 college presidents, led by Harvard's. There were no blacks on the committee. Poor people get a poor education in high school, and look it up, how many of this year's Prop 48 students are white? The NCAA lied and came up with one."

Chaney himself has three players who are sitting out the season because of Prop 48, which alone could have a lot to do with his reasoning. He has threatened to fight the legislation through the legal system and has promised to "bring the NCAA to its knees."

However Chaney, Thompson and the other detractors have somehow managed to overlook some valid points. He failed to notice that three predominantly black colleges and one heavily black conference voted in favor of the Prop 42 motion.

They also do not seem to understand the type of heavy coddling that colleges heap on athletes in general. At best, the minimal requirements of Prop 48 are preposterous. Any student who isn't capable of reaching either goal more than likely would not be able to cut it in the classroom of a large university. It was for this reason that the legislation was passed in the first place.

Some argue that athletes deserve to be treated differently because of their talents. That in itself is ridiculous. Far too often are athletes put on a higher pedestal than the common student, and that has had a large effect on the reputation of collegiate athletics today. Documented cases often show that athletes stop going to class once their eligibility is used up.

One such example is that of Len Bias, the All-American from Maryland who died of a cocaine overdose two days after being drafted by the Boston Celtics. The investigation showed that Bias had stopped going to class the day after Maryland's last game that year, and he just sat waiting to go professional. These cases are more common than most college administrators would like to admit.

True, athletes do generate large amounts of revenue for a school, and in this day money seems to be the governing medium

Minutemen get transfer from U. Richmond

Bill Herndon, a 6-foot-4 freshman forward, has transferred from the University of Richmond to the University of Massachusetts, and will begin classes here this week.

Herndon, who played for the Spiders during the first semester and averaged 1.5 points, 0.8 rebounds and 6.4 minutes in seven games, will not become eligible to play for the Minutemen until the completion of the fall semester, 1989.

A native of Pittsburgh, Herndon averaged 17 points and 16 rebounds for Allerdice High School, which won the Pittsburgh City Championship with a record of 23-4 last year. The two-year captain scored over 1,000 career points and had over 1,000 rebounds. He was named All-District three times and All-Region during his senior year, while also being named second team All-State and to the Pittsburgh Post Gazette's Fabulous Five All-Star team.

Herndon becomes the third Pittsburgh native on the Minutemen, joining sophomore forward John Tate and freshman forward Jim McCoy. He was originally recruited by UMass, as well as Pitt and St. John's before enrolling at Richmond.

place and undefeated (7-0) in the conference, they also have the third longest winning streak (12) in the country.

Penn State: (8-6, 3rd place) The top rebounding team in the league, the Nittany Lions had their four-game win streak snapped last week by the worst rebounding team in the conference, Temple.

Rutgers: (6-8, 4th place) The Scarlet Knights have the league's top overall scorer, Tom Savage who pours in an average of 20 points per game for the Knights.

St. Bonaventure: (9-6, 5th place) St. Bonaventure set team highs and lows in its loss to UMass. SBU had a season low of 17 points in the first half against the Minutemen but then scored a season high of 67 in the second half. The Bonnies are one of two A-10 teams still undefeated at home, 7-0. (Temple 2-0)

Rhode Island: (7-7, 6th place) Things are still rough for first-year head coach and UMass alum Al Skinner. The Rams lost star forward Kenny Green with a bruised right hand in a game against UMass.

Duquesne: (8-8, 7th place) Duquesne has the highest scored upon defense in the conference (82 points allowed per game) but still recorded conference victories over UMass, URI, and St. Joseph's.

St. Joseph's: (4-11, 9th place) The Hawks are the lowest scoring team in the A-10 (65 ppg). Their only conference victory is over Duquesne.

George Washington: (1-14, 10th place) The Colonials were the last Div. I without a victory until they downed UMass by 26 points in Washington.

McCoy and Brown have started every game this season, a rare opportunity for freshman, and have matured into what super-hype sportscaster Dick Vitale calls BLBP . . .(Big League Ball Players).

"I think they're certainly two of the best players in the league," said Duquesne University coach Jim Satalin, who saw McCoy scorch the Dukes for 29 points earlier this year. "I think (Jim McCoy) is the most explosive freshman in the league. He's scoring a lot of points."

McCoy is sixth in scoring overall, but against conference opponents, McCoy is leading the league with over 22 points a game. Brown ranks third in the conference in steals.

Last season, Macon captured the Freshman-of-the-Week honor nine times. UMass' Rafer Giles had F.W. honors once. Now, in only eight weeks, McCoy and Brown have loaded their trophy cases with the honor.

Adding to his list of achievements, McCoy has more points in his first 16 games than any freshman up to that point has ever scored — scoring 20 or more points in six of his last eight games.

As a freshman, UMass' all-time leading scorer, Lorenzo Sutton, averaged 7.9 points per game —paltry when compared to McCoy's 17.6 ppg. Even Brown may eclipse Sutton, he is second on the team in scoring with 12 ppg.

Brown and McCoy have become a premier backcourt tandem and will perhaps surpass last year's URI's superduo of Tom Garrick and Carlton Owens as possibly the best one-two backcourt punch to come out of the Atlantic 10.

■ Prop. 42

in everyone's eyes. But let's make a comparison. Suppose a black student who is very talented in music or theater wants to attend UMass. Surely if that student were to get, say a 750 on the board exams, it wouldn't be enough for entrance, although an athlete may be treated differently. Is this justice?

UMass was one of 163 institutions which voted in favor of Prop 42, as opposed to 154 that said nay. Dean of Physical Education Dr. David Bischoff explained that, although he feels that SATs are racially biased, 700 is a very low score and anyone barely at that level stands a terrible chance of surviving college.

Yes, 700 is a low score, especially when you consider that you can get an automatic 400 points just for spelling your name correctly. That leaves 300 out of a remaining 1200 points, surely not an astronomical total by any means.

Since its passing, the NCAA has said that it will reconsider and re-evaluate Prop 42 before it takes effect in 1990. That has served to quiet the protesters down.

However, many feel that an athlete should be obligated to prove his/her worth to the university, both on the field/court and in the classroom, before any large financial commitments are made. Let the athlete prove that he/she is indeed capable of surviving the rigors of college academics before any money is offered. It seems fair enough that the school will bend rules to allow the athlete entrance based merely on talent, so the athlete should be able to give a little in return. Foot the bill for a year, prove your worth and then go from there.

After all, this is college athletics, and both words, alone, should bare equal weight.

Three members of the 1988 University of Massachusetts women's soccer team were named All-Americans by the nation's coaches.

April Kater, a sophomore midfielder, was chosen to the first team, while senior forward Michelle Powers and senior goalkeeper Carla DeSantis were selected to the second team.

Kater, from Mendham, NJ, tied for the team lead in scoring this season with eight goals and four assists, matching Powers, from Winchester, who had seven goals and six assists.

DeSantis, from Sudbury, posted a 12-3-1 record and a 0.81 goals against average, making 75 saves while registering 10 shutouts.

The 1988 UMass baseball team was awarded the New England Championship trophy recently by the Bosox Club, an organization affiliated with the Boston Red Sox.

The Minutemen finished 36-16 in 1988, good enough to earn the highest number of votes from New England Division I coaches. Accepting the trophy was UMass coach Mike Stone, who guided the Minutemen to the championship in his first season as head coach.

Dick Bergquist, former head coach of the UMass baseball team, was recently inducted into the Hall of Fame of the American College Baseball Coaches in Nashville, Tenn.

Bergquist, who coached the Minutemen for 21 years before retiring after the 1987 season, was elected to the Hall last March.

good races, according to Newcomb.

Despite losing the next two meets, Newcomb was especially proud of his team's performance, with many swimmers setting personal bests, a total of 23 in each meet.

"The next two meets were one of the most exciting experiences I've had at any time in the dual meet season," Newcomb said. "What helped a lot was our strict energy regime (regarding their training schedule), and it proved itself worthy."

Leary once again starred in the meet against BC (a 166-134 loss), setting two school records in the 200 free (1:55.38) and the 100 free (53.68). Her times, according to Newcomb, are the best in New England this year.

Freshman Kim Morin also impressed Newcomb in the sprints, as did McCamy, whom Newcomb changed from long sprints to long distance.

"She's proved that we made the right decision. She had lifetime bests in the 500 and the 1000," Newcomb said.

He was also pleased with the performance of junior Debbie Mullen, a diver who "managed to relax and get some good dives, better than she has in her three years here."

Newcomb was surprised with the performance of the University of Buffalo, a team that Newcomb scheduled last season, but had a large recruiting season last year.

"It was one of the best meets since I've been here. I really didn't know what to expect from them, but they came in and set seven pool records," Newcomb said.

Newcomb pointed out that his own team would have set four of those records in that meet had they not been outdone by their visitors.

Leary set another school record, this time in the 50 free (24.76) and also won the 200 and 100 free races. She also teamed up with Theresa Jacobs, Morin and Patty Pike to establish the best freestyle relay time in New England this year. She also qualified for the Nationals in all three events, as did Waller in the 200 breast.

LaFreniere said she was hoping to qualify her two throwers at the teams meets in Boston.

Outside of the qualifying performances, the Minutewomen received some other outstanding contributions. In the distance-medley-relay, an event not run at the New Englands but rather at the ECAC Championships, UMass placed fifth at the Yale meet with a qualifying time of 12:29 — good enough to qualify for the ECACs.

At Harvard, UMass placed three runners in the 3,000 meter race. Laura LaValle (10:38) came in sixth, Peers (10:41) took seventh, and Kathy Holt finished it up in 15:58.5. Hill grabbed third in the mile with her five-minute burst, Shana Smith was eighth in 5:09.7, and Lynn Kirchoff came in 5:39.

"They're running tired," said LaFreniere, who has been putting the team through double sessions since Jan. 8. "We've had to work through these two meets."

A big achievement for the Minutewomen was in the 4x8 relay which ran the race in 9:36.8, "about 14 seconds faster than the week before," according to LaFreniere.

For now, UMass will continue to focus all its energies on the approaching New England championships. With two meets in Boston this past weekend (deadline restrictions didn't allow for results in today's paper).

At those two races, LaFreniere said she was hoping to run Hill and Smith in 1,000 meters. And keep pushing the rest of the team before the championship.

Students choose apathy on political menu

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

How important are campus politics. No . . . really? How important are they to you? Does the plight of Jason and Shari have a genuine effect on a large percentage of University students?

It wasn't so long ago when both Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff received national attention for the ruckus which erupted as they attempted to take the executive office. The mudslinging shouting matches we affectionately call Student Senate meetings have become a tradition. How much does it matter? Less than 20 percent of undergraduate students vote in campus-wide elections for senators, trustees and executives. Apathy is a problem throughout the United States, and as this campus reflects the national trend, the place of politics on the average student's agenda is one to be questioned.

Taking statistics into account, it's not hard to predict how most students feel about the importance of politics (national, local or campus) in their lives.

". . . politics aren't really important to me. I don't really pay attention to it very much," said Toby Goldstein, a UMass engineering student.

When asked how he felt about campus politics, one journalism student replied: "I shouldn't really say anything about it, because I don't really do anything about it. I'm really not one to complain, but from what I read in the Collegian, it seems all they (student senators) do is argue."

"I really don't pay attention to any of the politics."

A popular response among a great many students in Amherst. Could it be that only the student office holders themselves maintain any real level of interest?

Members of the Undergraduate Senate and Board of Governors reach celebrity status on campus through the day to day local media coverage of their interactions with administrators, students and each other.

Jennifer Hughes is a former Undergraduate Senator, and committee chairperson.

"I used to be very active in the Student Government Association, but over the past couple of years as I've become less involved, it just seems to be a bunch of mudslinging, and people insulting each other, and nothing's really getting done. So at this point in my life it is at the bottom of my agenda as to what is important to me."

Becky Zumbruski feels that politics have a definite effect on her, but was quick to point out that she does not get involved.

"It's basicly at the bottom of my agenda. I'm not involved at all. . . . it effects me, but it's just like how I'm not involved in world politics."

No doubt, it will be interesting to see if this semester brings more interest and activity in student government, taking into account the massive state budget cuts and Chancellor Duffey's suggestion that students write to their congressmen.

In the past, students have risen to the occasion of protest when something they held dearly was taken away, and while by no means earth shattering issues, the right to drink on campus, to tailgate and to hold undisturbed parties at least stirred enough interest and emotion to make a lot of people want to have a hand in designing the future of student life . . . Apathy or not.

Hoffman's acting clinic, a Cruise with the Rain Man

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

One of the great feelings in life, in addition to receiving a good grade, winning lots of cash on a football game and finding your car keys, is getting more than you expected from something. Rain Man starring Dustin Hoffman and Tom Cruise, offers such an experience.

In many cases, regardless of the overall quality of a picture, a great performance can make a trip to the cinema worthwhile. Mickey Rourke's inconsistency and the bizarre nature of Angel Heart were countered by the brief, yet brilliant appearances by Robert DeNiro. Barbara Streisand delivered a convincing performance in Nuts, though the film suffered otherwise and Al Pacino's portrayal of Tony Montana was a festival of linguistic achievement, in spite of Scarface's brash nature.

In Rain Man, Dustin Hoffman, taking on perhaps the most challenging film role of all time, nails down the mannerisms of autistic-savant Raymond Babbit flawlessly. His performance is compelling, convincing, humorous and touching.

As Raymond's younger brother Charlie, Tom Cruise delivers more than he ever has in the past, displaying a genuine transition from a hustling, cheating, ultra-slick sportscar dealer to an honest, loving brother.

Both Hoffman (Ishtar) and Cruise(Cocktail) are bouncing back from critical and financial failures on the big screen. If that's what it took to get their best performances out of them, then fine, everyone's the better for it.

Rain Man is sort of a less comical Midnight Run. While there's no private eye/bounty hunter action here, the "cross-country on wheels" theme takes up the brunt of the screen time, as Charlie Babbit hauls Raymond from his Cincinnati hospital in an attempt to claim half the inheritance bestowed upon him by their father.

Raymond's lack of aptitude for simple matters of survival; "Raymond, how much does a candy bar cost?"

"Oh . . . 'bout a hundred dollars." is as compelling as his phenomenal aptitude for mathematics, and his computer bank memory.

His stringent daily routine is handled in a refreshing comical light, and his outbursts of terror and anger are truly frightening.

While being thin of plot, Rain Man provides a thoughtful look into a relationship based solely on the events during a six day period. Raymond is not only from a different world than Charlie, he is in a world all his own, different from all others. Their conflicts are bumpy and disturbing, yet when their "trip" is over, they are closer than many brothers get in a lifetime. Rain Man gives you that "feeling". Go see it, and hang onto your car keys.

Eddy Clearwater, Chicago bluesman extraordinaire, and his hot band will perform at the Hampden Theater Flimdoozy Club, Feb. 9 at 9 p.m.

Blues begins arts program

What the hell is a Flimdoozy?! Well, thanks to the Residential Arts division of the Fine Arts Center, a lot of people will soon find out. FLIMDOOZY is a new music series sponsored by Residential Arts. On February 9 at 9 p.m., the Hampden Theater will kick off the program with Chicago bluesman Eddy "The Chief" Clearwater.

Flimdoozy is short (or is it long?) for blues party. Ironicly, it's also the title of Clearwater's latest album. The program will feature monthly events, showcasing talented jazz, blues, reggae, rock and salsa musicians from both national and local levels.

The FLIMDOOZY program will be presented in a setting much like that of a jazz/blues club minus the alcohol, and is sponsored in part by the University of Massachusetts Arts Council. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $2 for Five-College students and senior citizens. Tickets are available at the FAC Box Office or by calling 545-2511.

Eddy Clearwater is among the most versatile blues artists to have emerged from the steaming Chicago blues scene. Raised on a mixture of delta blues, country and western, and Alabama gospel music, Eddy made his final shift to the blues in 1953, like many of his counterparts, making the move from down south to the windy city.

Listing Chuck Berry as a major influence, Clearwater has adopted the duckwalking, good natured style to his own stage performances. During the 70's Clearwater and his band toured extensively throughout the United States and Europe, and in 1980, his first lp The Chief appeared on the Chicago based Rooster Blues label, and garnered much critical acclaim.

In 1987, with special permission from the US government, Eddy Clearwater toured 6 countries in West Africa, realizing a longtime dream.

Clearwater has received positive critical press from papers such as the Chicago Tribune, The Boston Globe, The New York Times, The Pittsburgh Press and The Milwaukee Journal.

DANCE!! . . . The American Indian Dance Theater is the nation's first professional dance company of American Indian dancers and musicians. The company's productions include all traditional dances, accompanied by live drums, bells, rattles and flutes. They will perform at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall this Saturday Feb. 4, at 8 p.m. Tickets available at the FAC Box Office.

FAC starts new season

The world of theater is alive at the University of Massachusetts. The following announcements come courtesy of the Fine Arts Center and its divisions.

The Performing Arts Division is currently accepting registrations for music, dance and theater instruction for the spring semester. Instruction is available to anyone in the community as well as University students, faculty and staff regardless of age or level of ability. Registration ends Feb. 16 in the Old Chapel. To obtain a brochure containing more information, contact the Performing Arts Division in room 115 in the Old Chapel (545-0519).

On Feb. 4, the Fine Arts Center will begin its run of a minifestival designed to give recognition to the excellence of American performing artists. The program contains seven events, and will run through March 1.

The festival's events include: American Indian Dance Theater, Roadside Theater, The Black Swan Quartet, The Colorado Quartet and The Ohio ballet.

Tickets for all events are available at the FAC Box Office. For information, call 545-2511.

The Friends of the Fine Arts Center have launched their annual Fund drive campaign with a goal of $100,000. This is the highest goal in the Center's history. Funding will be used to underwrite programming expenses.

Information regarding the newly revised Friends' membership benefit plan is available at the Development Office, Fine Arts Center, 545-3670.

Actor John O'Neal will bring his critically acclaimed one-man show to the Bowker Auditorium on Wednesday, Feb. 8 when he performs Don't Start Me to Talkin' or I'll Tell Everything I Know: Sayings from the Life and Writings of Junebug Jabbo Jones, Volume I.

"Junebug Jabbo Jones" is a compilation of tales, anecdotes and aphorisms collected by O'Neal and others during the Southern Civil Rights Movement in the 1950's and 60's.

This show is part of the Fine Arts Center's Arts America '89 Festival. Tickets are $16 and $14 at the FAC box office. Call 545-2511.

The Friends of the FAC Board of Directors recently elected Carl Eger and Barbara Bernard, both of Holyoke, as Chair and Vice-Chair respectively. The positions hold a two-year term.

Classic Hit radio opens up market

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

In 1968: college campuses across the country were being turned upside down, the Impossible Dream had come and gone at Fenway Park, the war in Vietnam had become the war on the networks' evening news, Led Zeppelin was merely an opening act, Jason Rabinowitz was merely an infant, Richard Nixon was president and AOR (Album Oriented Radio) was born.

In the 21 years since, FM stations across the country (i.e. WBCN in Boston) have been tried and tested by disco, metal, punk and rap; and for the most part remained true to the popular format which emphasizes the artists, not simply their Billboard entries. So the folks who ushered in this format to the tune of The Who, Santana and Iron Butterfly, carry on today with INXS, Guns-n-Roses and Iron Maiden . . . right?

Well . . . not really. With growth comes maturity (in most cases), and the development of the baby boom generation has called for development in radio. Enter Classic Hits or Classic Rock radio. The term tried and tested comes to mind again, for the music which has continually remained at the top of everyone's playlist, and in the words of Cliff Blake, Program Director at WZLX in Boston; " . . . transcended itself through generations" is that which makes up the Classic Hit format.

Not to be confused with Oldies stations, which for better or for worse, see fit to keep listeners in at least a two decade time warp, Classic radio finds itself within a realm of musical quality. Lyrical messages with timeless appeal, instrumentation which defies the concept of normalcy, and just plain old good tunes. "If they could really play or had something to say." is Blake's one line programming commandment.

While rock and roll is the foundation of most successful Classic Hit stations, the diversity of the format is the primary factor in its popularity. Cindy Bailen, on-air personality and Director of Research at WZLX feels the combination of classic, popular, different musical styles keeps the listeners happy.

"In an hour on WZLX, you can hear Led Zeppelin and Simon and Garfunkel. You could hear Deep Purple and Joni Mitchell, or Aerosmith and Carol King." Bailen said.

"The main things the artists that we play have in common is their longevity, and a certain quality that their work has," she added.

So who's tuning in?

If there's such a thing as a "quality audience", Classic Hit stations have got it. Falling between the ages of 25 and 45, the majority of listeners are part of the money making, disposable income work force that advertisers drool over. In approaching a prospective customer, ad salesmen are always keen to speak in terms of the advertiser's needs, however, a media organization whose audience posesses such buying power no doubt has a definitive edge on the business end.

Jerry Charm is General Manager at WZLX. With a good product behind him, he feels the station can more than adequately meet the needs of its customers.

"We don't talk about ratings, we don't talk about programming when we sell ads. We talk about the customers' business and their needs. Programming is only a factor in the selling process when we're talking about how we will present the ad on-air." Charm said.

With a balance of careful programming, and logical sales and promotional moves, Classic Hit radio should firmly plant itself within the industry for an extended and prosperous future.

Most major markets in the country now feature at least one Classic Hit station, and those that don't are carefully experimenting with the format. In Western Massachusetts, WAQY in Springfield features a classic rock lunch hour, and in Hartford Connecticut, WHCN peppers its playlist with a good dose of classic songs. The format is about four years old (ZLX was the first classic station in the country), and there are no signs of stunted growth. An article in a Boston paper last year asked the question: "Are classic hits killing FM radio?" From the looks of today's market, it seems they've breathed some life into it for a whole generation of people.

Arts aplenty

Summer Abstract Series

Described by critics as the "Renoir of Abstract Expressionism," University of Massachusetts professor John Grillo will be exhibiting his recent works beginning Thursday and continuing through Feb. 26 at Hampden Gallery at the UMass.

The show will open with a reception from 5-7 p.m. Thursday at the gallery.

Coinciding with the show, Grillo's Park Series will be exhibited from Feb. 16 to April 1 at the Sync Gallery in Northampton.

Dining Rooms and Furniture for the Typical House

This is an installation of a recent work by artist/architect Allan Wexler and will open Saturday and run through March 17 at the University Gallery at UMass.

The selection of work created between 1986-88 includes small buildings and furniture as well as proposals, drawings, and collages related to dining rooms and furniture for the typical house.

Naum Gabo Monoprints

This exhibition of a little-known body of work by one of the pioneers of 20th century sculpture will be on display from Saturday through March 17.

The exhibition presents prints made from engraved woodblocks which are two-dimensional interpretations of Gabo's sculptural theories and interests.

Leaving Egypt

This newest dramatic musical by the Roadside Theater will be presented at 8 p.m. Feb. 7 in Bowker Auditorium at UMass.

Set in 1969, the play is the story of a grandfather who finds himself in conflict with the modern world, when he learns of a plan to evict him from his mountain homeplace.

Roadside Theater is a traveling ensemble whose home is in the central Appalachian coalfields of southwestern Virginia and eastern Kentucky. The company has spent 12 years developing original plays drawn from the rich mountain history and culture of its home.

Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office for $16 and $14. Mastercard and Visa are accepted. Call 545-2511 for ticket information.

Beat Cafe Series

As part of the monthly Beat Cafe series, the group is sponsoring a free participatory workshop with the multi-talented performers Andrea Hairston and Tony Vacca. The workshop will take place at 10:30 a.m. Feb. 9 in the Hampden Theater at UMass.

The session will include demonstrations and will also actively engage participants in a range of Arfo-American expressive arts — from rhythms and dance forms of West Africa to contemporary American compositions.

Collegian choices for dining out

For those living on campus, trapped by the Dining Commons' rotation of quasi-food, and equally so, for those who live off campus, whose idea of "cooking" is boiling up an Oodles of Noodles, the struggle to nourish oneself without committing involuntary nutritional suicide can be genuine, particularly for those on a tight budget (and who isn't?).

It's unrealistic to think it's possible to eat out all the time without a short term loan, but when it's time to treat yourself, the town of Amherst has some good restaurant options at affordable prices. All the dining establishments listed here should be well within the reach of the average college student's "leisure time budget".

Chinese Food

Hunan Garden
Adjoining Changes dance club, the Hunan Garden offers good quality Chinese fare, a nice setting, and moderate prices. Best bet is the all you can eat brunch. An assortment of chicken, beef and vegetable dishes is offered, all for $5.99.

Panda East
Probably the best Chinese food in the area. Panda East has daily lunch specials which can't be beat for value and quality.

American Fare

The Pub
The Pub is an inexpensive spot for good burgers, sandwiches and salads. This is a favorite for dates, for at 9 p.m. the dance floor is open and The Pub becomes a club. Watch out . . . huge portions.

Delano's
Much like the Pub in the way of food, but in a quiet, homier setting. Eat at the bar for a change of pace.

Pizza

Pinnochio's
In North Amherst. A little pricier than your standard delivery joints, but the well crafted pies and excellent toppings make it worth the extra buck or two.

College
Mainly a delivery business to campus students, College Pizza is also a sit down favorite for late night snacks. Excellent pizza, particularly the stringy hamburg.

Andy's
Similar to College in style. Andy's also does a volume delivery business. They do offer cold beer for sit down customers, and their hot grinders are exceptional.

Miscellaneous

Taco Villa
A staple in Amherst for quite some time, Taco Villa's enchiladas, burritos and tacos are good and very inexpensive.
As always with Mexican food, heartburn is a risk.

Bub's Barbecue
On Route 116 in Sunderland, Bub's is definitely a place to go when you're really hungry. The barbecued chicken is just okay, but the ribs are phenomenal, and the all you can eat fixins are hot and delicious. Cold beer served. Moderate prices.

Songwriting trio Uncle Bonsai plays the Iron Horse Cafe this Thusday night.

Bonsai at the Horse Dinosaurs in the Joint

Welcome back. As we begin a new semester, this is what's hot on the Livewire

Thursday, at the Iron Horse in Northampton, the sardonic, sarcastic and comical trio Uncle Bonsai play two shows at 7 and 10 p.m. Thoughtfully outrageous songs like "Cheerleaders on Drugs", "Kill the Competition" and "Penis Envy" are drawn from their two albums A Lonely Grain of Corn and Boys Want Sex in the Morning. This show is part of their last tour until 1990.

Friday night, the Iron Horse Blues Palace features area favorite Jimmy Dawkins.

LIVEWIRE

On Sunday, singer songwriter Steve Forbert will be at the Iron Horse for two shows. Touring with material from what is perhaps his best album to date, Streets of This Town, Forbert's career has received a good kick in the pants amidst positive reviews from Rolling Stone, The Washington Post and the Atlanta Constitution.

This Friday night at Sheehan's Cafe, The Danger Brothers take the stage. Red hot Burlington Vermont band Phish return to Sheehan's on Saturday, February 11th. Their two shows in the Valley this past December, particularly the one at the Hampshire College Red Barn, were among the best all year. Tommorrow night at Sheehan's, Joe Crash and the Whiplash take the stage at 9.

Also Friday night, Dinosaur Jr. will play the Universal Joint, downstairs at Pearl Street. Buffalo Tom opens the show. Saturday afternoon, Dinosaur Jr. returns for an all ages show.

Roomful of Blues plays the Universal Joint this Thursday.

At Katina's in Hadley, Physical Graffiti, the popular Led Zeppelin tribute band plays this Friday night. Show starts at 9 p.m.

If you missed Taj Mahal last night at the Iron Horse, he'll be joined by Richard Thompson and David Bromberg Friday night at 7:30 at the Paramount Performing Arts Center in Springfield.

Tale of one refusenik

This Thursday, Feb. 2 at 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium, the Jewish Arts Festival at UMass will present IRINA, a one woman play written and performed by Dafna Soltes. IRINA is the story of a Soviet Refusenik, and includes narration, dialogue, music, dance and song.

This performance is the opening event for the Jewish Arts Festival organized by B'nai B'rith Hillel at UMass.

The story of IRINA was written by Soltes after visiting the Soviet Union in 1987. Irina's character is modeled after the many refuseniks she's met in the Soviet Union, NY and Israel.

Dafna Soltes is artistic director of Libaynu Dance Company in New York, and among her other noted works are: The Story of Hannah Senesh, Chagall a Fantasy, Blindfold and Smitten Joy.

She has appeared on and off Broadway and has performed internationally. Soltes teaches movement and dance studies at the Laban/Bartenieff Institute.

IRINA is directed by Jon-Christopher Bua and produced by Daniel Stein. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $2 for students.

Other Jewish Arts Festival activities will include a showing of reknown artist Aviva Green's paintings from Feb. 6-27, a workshop in Israeli Folkdancing on Feb. 8 and 22 and a screening of Woody Allen's Purple Rose of Cairo on Feb. 9. For more info contact the Hillel Office at 545-2526.

Horrific supernaturals spice Lumley's Necroscope

By ANTHONY PADOVANO
Collegian Staff

NECROSCOPE
Brian Lumley
Tor Books

Brian Lumley has arrived.

With his new book Necroscope, Lumley enters the genre of mainstream horror, combining international espionage and the supernatural in a well told tale that keeps the reader on edge with anticipation.

With these components weaved so brilliantly together, Lumley captures a new twist, which in itself makes the book worthwhile.

Two other factors that make this book enjoyable are the detached yet strong empathy the reader feels for the hero and his seemingly fated life and the style with which Lumley plys his craft. The action is clear, fast and always vivid. The passage early in the book where Dragosani tears information from a dead Soviet traitor is one of the more horrifying scenes in recent memory.

Both the hero, Englishman Harry O'Brien and the villian, Soviet Boris Dragosani, share a rare power — they have the ability to speak with the dead. The difference lies in how they do it.

Harry's mother, who was also a psychic, was murdered by her second husband, a Soviet plant. After Harry stumbled across this ability his mother tells him how she was killed and Harry sets out to kill his stepfather. The event is the first domino in a chain that leads to the antagonists' final confrontation.

Dragosani was born in the shadow of the hills in Transylvania and stumbles across the grave of a long-buried vampire. Eventually, the vampire teaches him how to rip information from steaming entrails and suck knowledge from decomposing brains of deadmen, filling their still active subconscious minds with blistering agony. Dragosani rises through the ranks of a top secret Soviet Espionage branch, while Harry is aligned with its British counterpart.

After a series of plot twists, the dead come to see Harry as a champion and Dragosani as a vicious demon, as both the hero and the villian converge on a spectacular climax, involving a legion of dead men marching on the heavily guarded Soviet ESP compound.

Lumley's smooth prose makes for quick reading and he uses the language to manipulate the reader into reading "just one more chapter."

Though Lumley's work does not project the suffocating gloom of a Stephen King novel or the intricasies of a Robert Ludlum spy novel, he combines the two in such a way that bubbles tense action. Definitely worth reading.

Students suffer through add/drop

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Sean Powers is supposed to graduate this May. He should be thinking about celebrations, job opportunities, and preparing for the transition to post-University life.

Instead, he spent all of yesterday standing in add/drop lines thinking about the "nasty letter" he wants to write to the administration because he received only one of five classes for which he pre-registered.

"I can't graduate unless I get my classes," Powers said. "If we pay for the classes, we should be able to get the classes."

According to Janet Bell, acting registrar for the University of Massachusetts, there were 16,386 "involuntary drops" this semester due to cancellations and oversubscribed classes.

Bell said almost twice as many students were dropped from classes this semester, because of cancellations, than a year ago.

Several students said they are beginning to feel the effects of these cancellations, and many are choosing classes blindly in order to fill their schedule.

"I'm getting really nervous," said senior Patti Lukas, who only received one class. "I feel like I'm grabbing anything to graduate."

First-year-student Micheal Bell is behind 18 people trying to sign into an anthropology class and sophomore Lori Seltzer is number 40 on a waiting list for sociology 103.

NOT A LOT 22– The sparse amount of cars and activity on campus over intersession was a stark contrast to what most UMass students are accustomed to seeing.

"I went to class and the guy said 'you'd better leave," Seltzer said.

Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Norman Aitken said there is a "good likelihood" the cancellations are a result of this year's budget revisions, which caused the University to surrender $5 million to the state.

Members of the Student Government Association are making copies of students' oversubscribed schedules and sending them to state representatives in Boston to illustrate the effects of the budget cuts.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice, and Michael Greiner, chair of the public policy committee, said they have collected more than 350 copies of students' schedules and will continue the effort through this week.

"It's particularly bad this year," Orefice said. "A lot of state representatives are walking around asking for more cuts. We can't handle any more cuts."

"They have constituents out there who are struggling to make it through college and they might not make it in four years," she said.

Tickets sell-out for Farrakhan lecture

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Tickets for Minister Louis Farrakhan's lecture sold out yesterday after being on sale for a little more than 24 hours at the University of Massachusetts.

Farrakhan, a leader of the Nation of Islam, is scheduled to speak in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall tomorrow at 7:30 p.m.

Five-College students, faculty and staff were allowed to purchase tickets for tomorrow's show at the Fine Arts Center box office while students could purchase tickets at the New Africa House through Phi Beta Sigma fraternity and the New Agenda organization.

Student activities coordinator Margaret Arsenault, who is an advisor for the event, said the separate ticket distribution was arranged "to make sure there was student access" to tickets during the rush of student registration.

UMass spokeswoman Jeanne Hopkins said that news of the event circulated through Office of Public Information press releases and by word-of-mouth. There was no paid advertising for the event. Members of Phi Beta Sigma refused to comment on this.

OPI staff member Stacey Chase said a total of about 1,700 tickets were sold. The Fine Arts Center box office opened at 8 p.m. on Monday and was sold out by

State higher Ed.: future bleak

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The plight of public higher education in Massachusetts was discussed by some of the state's top officials Monday, and the picture they presented was bleak.

Speaking before the Joint Committee on Education, Board of Regents President Franklyn Jenifer said this is the first year in the history of Massachusetts public higher education that qualified students have been denied admission.

System-wide, 2,000 students were turned away this semester, he added.

Jenifer said if the new higher education appropriation in the fiscal year 1990 state budget is approved, state higher education would be brought back to only 1987 levels, but at least "we would not be in a situation where we are closing doors on students."

Also speaking before the board was University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who was representing the University. Duffey said that in the past few years UMass had become competitive with prestigious state universities across the country and the budget cuts were severely damaging that status.

Duffey said a few years of neglect by the state can destroy any gains made by the University in the past decade.

"To squander the gains of the past decade is very shortsighted," he said.

Duffey said the state needs to examine priorities and resources in an effort to protect higher education from further setbacks.

Even with the new appropriations, Duffey said courses and programs were going to be eliminated and that the budget cuts hurt upper-level course offerings the most.

John Cole, a professor of anthropology, said budget cuts damage professors abilities to conduct research, which directly affects what is taught.

"The knowledge we pass-along is also knowledge we have created," he said.

Also representing UMass were James Boylan, a professor of journalism and UMass chapter president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, Sue Buechler of the graduate student senate and Jay Festa, president of the commuter area government.

Minority services restructured

By MARIA SACCHETTI

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said this week that the University of Massachusetts has taken critical steps toward improving minority student services, including a $2 million to $5 million project to install a multi-cultural center in the Student Union building.

Farrakhan's rise to power 1964-88

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Second of three articles on black/Jewish relations

Louis Farrakhan started his rise to power in 1964 when Malcolm X broke with the Nation of Islam and its founder, the Honorable Elijah Mohammed.

Following Malcolm X's suspension from the Nation for remarks regarding President Kennedy's assasination, a replacement minister for his Harlem Mosque was needed. Farrakhan was chosen.

In 1965, Iman Warith Deen Mohammed took over control of the Nation of Islam and turned away from the more radical teachings of his father, Elijah, and of Malcolm X's.

Iman changed the Nation of Islam into the American Muslim Mission, a satellite group of the Islamic faith in America.

After Iman, Farrakhan took up the banner of the Nation of Islam and Elijah's teachings and is today the nation's leader.

The Nation still believes in the direction of its founder and, according to writer John F. Davis, who interviewed Farrakhan; the group has three main purposes:

[bullet]Total freedom for blacks.

[bullet]Equal justice for all regardless of creed or color.

[bullet]Equality of opportunity.

In 1984 Farrakhan was making headlines indirectly through his support of presidential hopeful, Jesse Jackson.

When Jackson was accused of making anti-semetic remarks through the use of the word "hymie" by Washington Post reporter Milton Coleman, Farrakhan came to Jackson's defense stating that "One day soon we will punish you [Coleman] with death." Jackson later separted himself from Farrakhan's remarks about Coleman but did not denounce Farrakhan's ideologies.

Farrakhan's crowning achievement though, seems to be his October, 1985 Madison Square Garden speech in which he spoke to a capacity crowd, including an extra 5,000 who were watched from closed circuit television outside the Garden.

Although he is a black leader and has been accused of being anti-semetic, his affect on black/Jewish relations is a debatable question.

Not proclaiming to be an expert, Chester Davis, an associate professor of afro-American studies at UMass, said that Farrakhan has a "polarizing affect" on blacks and Jews.

"In a sense he becomes a catalyst for people to express certain ideas. Some people take advantage of this to express thier own views," he said.

Davis suggests for students to learn about Farrakhan personally and not rely on rumors and hearsay because there is a lot of misinformation around.

As an example of misinformation Davis said,"Some students seem to have the feeling that Farrakhan and his movement seem to be planning to attack Jews [physically]."

Davis does not believe this and said students should not either.

Davis said a postive side-affect of Farrakhan's visit will be the ensueing discussions between blacks and Jews about their relationship as a group.

Anthony Gee, a member of the black agenda group, agrees with Davis's idea.

"In this particular case I do not think we [blacks and Jews] would have had the dialouge without him coming to campus," he said refering to meetings of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Gee said he is not aware of a black/Jewish "bond" and that he didn't see Farrakhan as being a negative influence on anyone.

"The primary thrust of his message is pro-black, nothing else," he said, "Anything else is tangential."

Tomorrow, why blacks and Jews at the University of Massachusetts disagree so much on Minister Louis Farrakhan and his message.

Report says college enrollment for blacks on steady decline

From Collegian Staff Reports

The number of black males enrolled in college has declined alarmingly since the 1970s, a national education organization warned in a report issued last month.

While total college enrollment grew by more than a million students between 1976 and 1986, enrollment of black males fell by 34,000 during that period. The drop from 470,000 to 436,000 was the largest decline in college participation for any racial or ethnic group, the American Council on Education reported.

Reginald Wilson, co-author of the report, described the trend as the "systematic disappearance of black males," and said, "It is conspicuous that they are declining across the board."

Higher education officials and organizations have acknowledged for the past several years that diminished black enrollment constitutes a national crisis, but this is the first time they have focused exclusively on the disproportionate drop in black male enrollment.

The finding is particularly disturbing, authors of the report said, because black students have been completing high school at an increasing rate, up from 68 percent in 1976 to 76 percent a decade later. There is also evidence that more of these high school graduates have taken the courses necessary to be prepared for college. As a result, Wilson said, "you have a larger pool that is better prepared than 10 years ago."

He blamed several factors for the apparent failure of black males to go on to college, including: the federal financial aid policy, which has shifted from grants to loans as the primary form of assistance; lack of aggressive recruiting by colleges, and heightened entry requirements.

"Higher education, in concert with improved elementary and secondary schools, can do more and better than it has in the past to increase the educational attainment of black males," the report said. It called for comprehensive programs to "recruit, retain and graduate a more culturally and racially diverse population."

The figures are underscored by the widening disparity between black men and women on a number of measures of educational attainment. Black women, for example, maintained their proportion of college enrollments since 1976 at just over 5 percent, while black men dropped from 4.3 percent to 3.5 percent of enrollment.

Also, college-enrollment rates for black women were greater than for black men in 1986.

Wilson and co-author Deborah J. Carter said studies show that the black males are not flocking to the military either. Some have entered jobs and others are seeking work, but the authors believe a significant proportion have opted to attend for-profit career vocational schools. The remainder of the black male high school graduates probably are unemployed and not seeking work, or are in prison, they said.

"Where we've seen increases in enrollment, like New Jersey for example, it's because the state has taken the initiative," said Carter.

While some vocational schools successfully graduate students and place them in jobs, Wilson said state and federal studies have shown that, in many cases, "the quality of those institutions left a lot to be desired."

Other findings in the report:

- The proportion of Hispanic 18 to 24-year-olds completing high school increased from 55.6 percent in 1976 to 59.9 percent in 1986, but the proportion enrolled in college declined from 35.8 percent in 1976 to 26.9 percent in 1985.
- Hispanics and blacks are much more likely than whites to leave college before obtaining a degree. For example, six years after entering a public, four-year institution, just over a quarter of Hispanics and blacks had received a bachelor's degree, compared to 48 percent of white students.

UMass Equestrians in W. Germany

Six team members to represent Team USA in Nations Cup

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Equestrian team hopes to gain international recognition this week when six of its members represent Team USA in this year's first Intercollegiate Nations Cup tournament in Dillenburg, West Germany.

The team, which left in the last week of January, is composed of Carolynne Stronczek, Melissa Camadine, Rebecca Kells, Sarah Toppin, Lisa Dionne and Chris Martin. UMass will join college teams from 15 countries to attend the three day event which is hosted by Marburg University.

Dionne, who has been riding for 10 years, said the riders will show jumping and dressage, or horse guidance.

"It's really exciting," she said. "You're in there to do your best, not to beat everybody."

Gerry Noonan, spokesperson for the International Intercollegiate Equestrian Group, Stowe, Vt., said the Nations Cup competition is one of six to be held this year. Tournament judges will total the points accumulated in each competition by Team USA to determine the final score.

Noonan said the social aspect of the tournament, culminating in parades and a large reception attended by city dignitaries, is as important as the competition itself.

"It's a three day celebration of college students," he said. "Good equestrians come together in behalf of their country. They live together, play together and talk together."

The Nations Cup tournament is unlike anything offered to students in the United States, Noonan said.

"It offers a student the ability to go beyond what we offer in the US as a riding program," he said. "The educational value of this is phenomenal. They'll see things most of us just dream about."

After the Nation's Cup tournament, the students will tour East and West Germany and complete the 14-day trip with a final show in Berlin, Noonan said.

Minority enrollment steady

The number of minority first-year students at the University of Massachusetts dropped by one, from 368 to 367 this past fall, but Admissions Director Timm Rinehart said the figures have doubled from a decade ago.

Rinehart said it is difficult for the University to recruit minority students because of fierce competition from other colleges and universities, UMass' history of racial unrest, and the inadequacies in financial aid resulting from the Reagan era.

"It's a struggle," he said. "There are a small amount of students and a whole lot of people interested."

Three admissions staff persons commit half of their time to working on a "comprehensive minority recruitment program" to help decrease the region's high school dropout rate and prepare minority students for college level studies, Rinehart said.

"It's not the numbers of freshmen that count," he said. "It's numbers of seniors that graduate. Our goal is to graduate a senior."

Campus Snow Policy 1988-1989

Save This Page for Reference

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all campus activities in as nearly routine a way as possible. Since a large number of faculty, staff, and students normally bring cars onto campus, it is important for all concerned to understand clearly what policies and procedures will be followed in the event of a severe snow storm that temporarily limits parking capacity on campus.

Radio Announcements

Classes and all other scheduled activities on campus will be held as usual unless specific announcements to the contrary are made beginning at 6 a.m. and continuing periodically throughout the day in question. Such announcements will be made on radio stations WTTT-Amherst 1430 AM, WHMP-Northampton 1400 AM, WMAS-Springfield 1470 AM, WGAM-Greenfield 1520 AM, WHAI-Greenfield 1240 AM, WARE-Ware 1250 AM, WCAT-Orange 1390 AM, WHYN-Springfield 560 AM, WFCR-Amherst 88.5 FM, WTIC-Hartford 1080 AM, WACE-Springfield 730 AM, WTAG-Worcester 580 AM, WSPR-Springfield 1270 AM, WMUA-Amherst 91.1 FM, and WGGB-TV Springfield, Channel 40, WTSA-Brattleboro VT 1450 AM, WRSI-Greenfield 95.3, WAQY-Springfield 102.1 FM. It is important that you stay tuned to your radio for additional information in the event of a change.

The following will be the only announcements made concerning closing the Amherst campus, and local radio stations will be asked to repeat them verbatim.

1. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus is closed today, but the library and buses are operating."

2. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus will delay opening until 11 a.m., but buses are operating.

3. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus is closing at___ p.m., but the library and buses are operating."

4. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus is closing at___ p.m. The library and buses are operating and third shift should report to work."

Snow Day Hot Line

As an additional convenience, a "snow day hot-line" has been installed. Taped messages will provide up-to-date information on the status of the campus and may be accessed by dialing 545-3630. This is the only campus number which should be called for such information.

Decision by 4:30 a.m.

The decision to cancel classes will be made at about 4:30 a.m., if the indications are that road travel is or will become hazardous or that insufficient parking capacity will be available. Cancellation of classes includes Continuing Education day classes as well as regular University classes.

Delayed Opening, 11 a.m.

In the event of a major snow storm, a decision may be made to delay the opening of the University until 11 a.m. The objective of this decision is to provide enough time to plow and clear roadways and sufficient parking capacity. Lots cannot be efficiently plowed if they contain parked cars.

Don't Call Personnel Office

If circumstances make it necessary to cancel classes during the day, this information will be communicated by the Personnel Office to the offices of the chancellor and vice chancellors which in turn will inform their respective schools/colleges, departments, and business offices. Departments should not call the Personnel Office concerning snow cancellations.

Bus Service

It should be assumed that bus services are operating, unless announcements are made specifically to the contrary on WTTT-AM, WMUA-FM and WHMP. For information regarding changes in bus schedules during snow storms call 545-2086 and 545-0056.

Suggestions

In order to alleviate the problems of clearing parking lots, it is suggested that all University personnel who normally bring a car onto campus consider the following possibilities during heavy snow:

- Make use of the bus service to the campus.
- Pool rides with others whenever possible.
- Walk if it is at all possible to do so.
- Have someone drop you at work so that the car does not have to be left on campus and so that the snow removal job during the daylight hours is facilitated.
- If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to either the peripheral lot west of Physical Plant or Lot 25. Under snow emergency conditions, it is not possible to guarantee that normal lot capacity will be available.
- Make use of the Campus Center Parking Garage (open 24 hours a day).

Snow Day Personnel

In the event that classes and all other scheduled activities are cancelled, only snow day personnel will be required to work. Heads of departments should review and update their snow day plans and notify employees who are designated as snow day personnel. Under certain circumstances (after 5 p.m., weekends, holiday periods, and Intersession), the Library may also be closed. Such closing will be announced over the radio stations listed above.

Procedures

When the University is closed, only snow day personnel should report to work.

When the opening of the University is delayed until 11 a.m., snow day personnel should report at their regular time or as soon as possible; all others should report to work at 11 a.m..

In order to allow plowing to be accomplished effectively, the following procedures will be implemented at once:

A. When the University is closed, or opening is delayed until 11 a.m., only snow day personnel should report to work at their regular time. All others should not come on campus, if at all possible.

B. Snow day personnel will be permitted to park only in the following lots: 32 and 34 (south of Whitmore SBA); 25 (west of Physical Plant, north of access way to the adjacent peripheral lot); 31 (north of Engineering, Graduate Research Center, etc.) 62 (south of Morrill Science)

Entrance to all other lots will be prohibited until the University is officially open for business. The Parking Garage is, of course, open for parking at all times.

Evening Classes And 2nd Shift

An announcement concerning evening classes (classes beginning after 5 p.m.) and second shift workers will be made if the decision is made to keep the University closed all day. Such announcements will be made prior to 1 p.m., over the same radio stations used for snow announcements. If the University is closed, but the second shift is required to report to work, second shift personnel will also be required to park in the lots listed in B above (32, 34, 25, 31, 62); all other lots will be closed for plowing.

■ minority services

The statement was issued in response to recommendations made by the Tillis Commission which reviewed the quality of minority services at the University last year.

Long-range plans are underway for the implementation of the center, but Madson said he will need more state aid to make it a reality.

"I'm really excited," he said. "It will fit in with the values of what this campus is all about."

Other changes include the elimination of the Division of Educational Access and Outreach, and the realignment of its departments, Madson said.

"We'll have more money to draw from," he said. "The academic support services will be four times its size in terms of staff."

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), and Upward Bound have been uprooted and are now part of the Division of Academic Support Services under Dr. Ann Quinley.

Dean Quinley heads seven departments in DASS, including Admissions, the New Students Program, Financial Aid, CCEBMS, BCP, Cooperative Education, and Placement Services.

In his response, Madson wrote that the realignments will bring closer ties for Financial Aid, CCEBMS, Admissions and BCP and should help address some "staff frustration."

Dr. Gloria De Guevara, former Director of DEAO, is now Associate Dean of Academic Support Services and will be responsible for all DASS programs and evaluations, the Challenge/Upward Bound programs, and seeking monies from outside of the University.

The Everywoman's Center and Handicapped Student Affairs will report to the new Dean of Students/Assistant Vice Chancellor, Madson said, adding that De Guevara will maintain supervisory responsibility for these departments during the transition period.

Plans to establish new programs for recruitment and retention of minority students are also in the works, he said, by directing CCEBMS and BCP to focus on advising minority students only during the first two years of study.

Advising during students' junior and senior years will be coordinated by their major department, he said.

A one-on-one mentoring program will be also be activated by fall of 1990, in which faculty staff and graduate students will participate, Madson said.

Also included in Madson's response is the immediate reorganization of four residence hall cultural centers, which he said is going into effect under the guidance of Joseph Zannini, director of housing services.

noon yesterday. Arsenault said 900 tickets were set aside for student purchase at the New Africa House. These tickets went on sale Monday at noon. The last 300 student tickets went on sale at noon yesterday and sold out in less than an hour. Hopkins said tickets not sold by 8 p.m. yesterday were originally to be sent back to the Fine Arts Center box office. Phi Beta Sigma refused to comment on this unusual method of ticket distribution.

Chase said about 50 seats will be set aside for the media, while a section of the orchestra pit will be reserved for photographers. Hopkins said most of the press passes for the event were distributed to news organizations in Massachusetts, although passes have been given to the New York Times, United Press International, and the Associated Press.

"I wouldn't be a bit surprised if it was carried beyond New England," she said.

An end to oppression?

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

In order to eliminate oppression, we must stop pointing fingers at groups and start addressing the system that perpetuates this cycle of persecution, Professor Barbara Love said last night.

"It is possible to eliminate oppression," Love said, "because the only energy it has is our energy. It is necessary to recognize that what we do matters."

Love spoke to about 20 people at the Campus Center during an open workshop to explore racism and anti-semitism, and their impact on relationships within the campus community.

"We must first realize that structured inequality is built into our society," Love said. Groups divided by religion, age, ability, class, sex preference, race, and other criteria, become a justification for some people having more than others, she said.

Anti-semi*tism and racism are part of the same phenomenon of oppression, she added. "Toleration of any form of oppression makes it possible for any other form of oppression to grow, to flourish," she said.

Participants of the three-hour workshop discussed how the groups they identified with, prompted them to play specific roles.

"All of us get a chance to play agent of oppression, and target or victim of oppression," Love said. "Our playing roles keeps the system functioning."

Members of the discussion said they came from varied religious and ethnic backgrounds, but most were graduate students from the Massachusetts area. Most of the group members were white.

Love said confusion and misunderstanding generated by Louis Farrakhan's planned visit prompted the event, which was sponsored by the Office of Human Relations.

Love was joined by workshop leaders Marianne Simon, an Amherst psychotherapist; Bekki Lee, dean of students at Amherst College; and Jim Bonila, a University of Massachusetts doctoral student and consultant for Diversity Works of Amherst.

Speaker urges blacks to accept more responsibilities

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

Blacks must solve their own problems and most black leadership does not reflect the aspirations of its people, a member of the Nation of Islam said last night.

Brother Don Mohammed spoke to 30 people in room 808 of the Campus Center about the history of the group and its goal to meet the needs of blacks first.

"The Nation of Islam is an organization set up explicitly to deal with the problems of blacks," Mohammed said.

Minister Louis Farrakhan, he said, is the only leader who can unite black people.

The Nation of Islam was started by Elija Mohammed in 1930 in Detroit, where he began teaching Islam until he was arrested for evading the World War II draft, Mohammed said. After his release, the founder toured large cities in the Northeast teaching Islam.

"He forced blacks to rally around him and anything that unified them," Mohammed said. "He tried to get us to have some kind of identity with ourselves."

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X attended meetings with Elija Mohammed, he said.

"I have been a follower for 31 years," Mohammed added. "We are honorable people and we will do no harm, but we will speak the truth as we see it."

Mohammed said the media stereotypes blacks while intentionally omitting the positive contributions of the Nation of Islam.

"There are some unethical people who don't want you to know about the Nation of Islam," he said. "We are the only organization that can't be crushed, the only organization that has fueled every other black organization."

Employees take share of paper company's 1988 $4.5 million profit

DALTON (AP) — Business was up in 1988 for the company that makes the paper for US currency and that meant more folding money for the workers.

Crane & Co. officials announced yesterday that following a 10.9 percent boost in sales, the paper manufacturer would contribute a record $4.5 million to its 28-year-old profit-sharing plan for its 1,100 employees here and at two North Adams subsidiaries.

The profit-sharing payments amounted to nearly one-fifth of the yearly salaries of the 375 workers at its Escelsior Process & Engraving Inc. and Excelsior Printing Co. plants in North Adams and 16.82 percent of the annual salaries for its 730 Dalton workers. Workers at Crane and its subsidiaries make from $6 to $12 an hour, officials said.

Last year, the company distributed $3.2 million to employees under the program.

Crane, which completed a $12.8 million capital program in 1988, also announced a $25 million program to upgrade its facilities and equipment in 1989 and 1990, including a $4.5 million, 60,000 square foot addition to the Waconah Mill where the company makes the paper used in US currency and that of some foreign countries.

Benjamin J. Sullivan, chairman and chief executive officer, attributed the company's success in 1988 to improvements in productivity coupled with price increases. He said a revived employee suggestion program allowed the company to trim $370,000 in production costs.

In addition to currency paper, Crane produces stationery for business and social use and a variety of speciality papers for drafting, filtration and other uses.

Sales were up for all of the company's products, said James D. Manning, personnel director. The company listed total sales of $119.8 million last year, compared to $108 million in 1987. It also obtained a new three-year contract to produce paper for US bills in early 1988, he said.

Company officials declined to reveal how much of their total sales involve paper used in currency and would not name the countries outside the United States that also use their paper. Crane, founded in 1801, first began making the paper on which US bills are printed in 1879.

The company was also working on a proposal to develop a "non-apparent" thread for currency paper that would be invisible under most circumstances, but would show up if the bill was copied using a color copier, officials said.

Aide's complaint spurs investigation of teacher

EASTHAMPTON (AP) — The superintendent of schools said yesterday that an aide's complaint about a teacher's conduct led to an investigation of alleged beating of special needs students at a middle school.

Teacher James J. Cavanaugh, 45, of Westfield, who has been placed on administrative leave, pleaded innocent Friday to eight counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. He was released on his own recognizance pending a pretrial hearing Feb. 13 and ordered to have no contact with students or school personnel.

According to court documents, Cavanaugh allegedly struck some of the fifth through eighth-graders in his class at the White Brook Middle School with a weightlifter's belt, a three-foot long plastic tube wrapped with rope and duct tape, and a small wooden oar.

None of the students were seriously injured in the alleged beatings, which took place between September 1988 and Jan. 13 of this year, according to court papers.

"It was not that he went in and beat up the class one day, it was simply that his method of controlling them was tantamount to abuse, though the court will determine if it was abuse," School Superintendent Randall H. Collins said.

Wakefield insurance company slated to layoff 125 employees

BOSTON (AP) — The American Mutual Insurance Cos., which have been placed into state receivership, will lay off about 125 workers at their Wakefield home office in two weeks, Insurance Commissioner Roger Singer said yesterday.

"Whatever happens to these companies, whether they are rehabilitated or [part of them] survive, it's pretty clear that they are going to be a much smaller entity, if they do continue," Singer said.

The layoff of 125 home office workers will be effective on Feb. 14 and follows the elimination of 207 company field positions nationally last week. More layoffs are planned, although exact numbers have not been released.

All of the layoffs to date have been in the areas of loss control and marketing. "Since the company is no longer writing new business or issuing renewals, these positions were found to be unnecessary," Singer said.

At the Insurance Division's request, the state Supreme Court issued an order Jan. 17 allowing the state to take over the 100-year-old insurance companies, naming Singer as temporary receiver.

The division took the action because of concerns American Mutual's reserve capacity could not meet its potential long-term liabilities, including claims for asbestos, medical malpractice and toxics pollution.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Black History Month begins today

In the beginning...

By JOSEPH L Hill Jr.
Collegian Staff

February is Black History Month and is "a time to reflect upon the beautiful heritage of Black Americans and their contributions to this Euro-American society," according to Edward Smith.

Black History Month was started by Dr. Carter G. Woodson, commonly referred to as the "Father of Black History." Woodson, originally selected a week in February because of two of the men he most admired were born during that month, Frederick Douglas and Abraham Lincoln, according to the Negro Historical Bulletin (also founded by Woodson). The week was extended to a complete month in as the importance of the week grew.

Each year there is a national theme for the month, this year theme is "The role of Afro-American churches in economic, political, and social development at home and abroad." In addition to a national theme, each week in February has a specific theme which black Americans should focus on, according to the Negro Historical Bullentin, the specific weekly designations are:

- Week one: Heritage... Let us remember: Events of Our Past; Freedoms and Our Forms of Government; Contributions to America's Founding Development and Continuance.
- Week two: Festival USA... Let us celebrate; Traditions of Our Peoples; Diversity of Our Cultures; Our Nations Togetherness.
- Week three: Horizons... Let us shape today; Set Goals, Secure the Blessings of Liberty; Involve each Citizen.
- Week Four: Culmination... Let Us Summarize; A recounting of major black history makers and events of historical substance. [in these periods] (1) blacks and the earliest years. (2) Blacks and the Revolution. (3) Blacks in the 1800's. (4) Blacks in the 1900's.

Applications accepted for S.S. numbers

This Friday, February 3, representatives of the Social Security Administration will be in the at the William S. Clark International Center, from 9 am to 3.30pm to take applications from foreign students wishing to recieve a social security number.

According to Pat Vokbus, Foreign Student Advisor, any person who to work must have a social security number. Recieving a number will be especially useful for identification and taxation purposes, according to Vokbus.

Applicants must appear in person with passport and visa documents:

- an F-1 student must bring their I-94, pages three and four of an I-20 A-B (yellow I-20 ID card if they have) and a passport;
- a J-1 holder must bring a passport, I-94 and the pink copy of the IAP-66;
- dependents of F and J visa holders and all persons in other categaories should bring a passport and an I-94.

However, having a social security number does not make the applicant eligible for employment, but "is a positive first step," according to Vokbus.

Mural wanted for Civility competition

A Civility Mural Competition is to be held. The competition is sponsored by the Umass Arts Council for students majoring in Art, Landscape Architecture, and Afro-American Studies. The deadline for submissions is February 10.

The competition is the offspring of an idea conceived by Jon Satz, an Environmental Design major. According to Marjorie Tuttle, "Jon was so moved by the idea of Civility Week that he wanted [to create] something permanent to keep us all in remembrance."

The mural is to be located on a concrete retaining wall just beyond the east access entrance to the Campus Center. The theme of the mural is civility.

A panel, made up of faculty and students with expertise in art and design, will jury the submissions. A maximum of three finalist will be selected to develop final design proposals. Each will be awarded a $100 honorarium. From the three finalists a single proposal will be selected by the jury and the finalists awarded a $500 honorarium and will serve as project director for the execution of the mural in late March-early April.

The implementation of the competition is pending approval of the Physical Plant and Campus Physical Planning Committee.

Africa's Gift to America highlights contributions to Western world

By THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

Published in 1961, Africa's Gift To America is one of the pioneering works in a relatively sparse list of publications denoting the contributions of Africa to "civilization." Within its pages J.A. Rogers reveals a wealth of seldom told facts about African women and men and their influences on the shaping of North America and its history.

Rogers begins with an examination of Africans in Antiquity. Renowned structures such as the pyramids, the Great Sphinx of Ghizeh, and the Temple of Amen — all fruits of Egypt, the author reminds us that these bear the unmistakable mark of the African. The empires of Ethiopa, the Mandingo, Yoruba and Ife kingdoms,and Timbuktu, which, scholars agree, during the period right around 1500 A.D. was more advanced than most Western European countries, flourished before any contact with Western "civilization." As early as 500 A.D. Africans were navigating the oceans to the Americas. As a matter of fact, it has been reported in Columbus' own diaries that it was based upon the rumors of such African expeditions that Columbus obtained a clue of such possibility. Rogers cites the plethora of African features on ancient American sculptures as evidence.

After firmly establishing the legacy of Africans in the diaspora and in North America prior to Europeans and their slave trade, Rogers then expounds upon the African-American and his impact upon the "making" and "saving" of the United States. The historian recalls Crispus Attucks, the black man recognized as being the first American to die "in the event that led most directly to the War of Independence". Attucks was celebrated as an American hero to such an extent that Crispus Attucks Day was celebrated yearly until Independence was achieved and it was replaced with the Fourth of July.

Black soldiers arguably were the deciding factor in the Revolutionary War. Rogers points out the heroics of such persons such as Mammy Kate, a black woman who rescued Governor Stephen Heard from a British prison during the Revolution by carrying him on her head in a large basket covered with clothes, and Oliver Cromell, one of the many blacks who had crossed the Delaware with Washington and served him diligently for six years. Others included Samuel Francis, a British West Indian who was the proprietor of the finest hostelry in colonial America and who hosted Washington and his staff regularly. During the war Francis offered food and money to the fight and fed free of charge officers who could not afford to pay him. His daughter, Phoebe Francis, saved Washington's life once when she warned him in time to stop him from eating poisoned food. Ironically, these black men and women as well as the hordes of those unsung were not desired by Washington and his cadres directing the Revolutionary War machine and were only officially included in the struggle when the numbers of whites had become so depleted that it became clear that without blacks the struggle for independence was lost.

Africa's Gift To America also makes clear the abundance of contributions made by blacks in the Civil War and afterwards. As was the case in the Revolutionary War, blacks were not wanted as compatriots in battle, and for the first two years Lincoln refused to officially use black troops. In an address before a church committee Lincoln said "We didn't go into the war to put down slavery but to put the flag back.".

In his annual message he said "In a certain sense the liberation of slaves is the destruction of property-property acquired by descent or by purchase, the same as any other property."

Eventually, however, the need for "negro troops" presented itself.As in the previous war, black soldiers fought valiantly and received the highest of commendations even by their white commanders.

Africa's Gift To America in it's concluding pages provides insight into some of the twentieth century's wealth attributed to Africa. At the time of publication most African states were still under colonial rule but were waging fierce struggles for independence. Rogers highlights rising leaders such as Jomo Kenyatta and Julius Nyrere whom history would later laud for ushering their countries into freedom. The author also foreshadows the importance of Africa's minerals and geographical position to the struggle between East and West for world domination.

Africa's Gift To America marks a milestone in the journey of a peoples towards self discovery and awareness. For too long the African in America had been isolated and deprived of knowledge of his awesome cultural legacy-indeed, the very legacy upon which the foundation of "civilization" is built. Long after the acquisition of physical emancipation, America's Africans suffered under the yoke a great inferiority complex-one born of the mistaken idea that their Western slave masters had saved them from their own backward,primitive cultures. Africa's Gift To America and works in its vein have served to refute such ignorance and put the African man and woman in their true light. Indeed, J.A. Rogers work is a gift.

FARRAKHAN AND UMASS: FOR THE RECORD

Several events in the past few years have focused UMass attention on anti-Semitism, but none more than the upcoming visit of Louis Farrakhan, minister of the Nation of Islam. Many unquestioningly believe that Farrakhan is an anti-Semite; others claim that his statements are widely exaggerated by the media. Is Farrakhan anti-Jewish as many believe? Judge for yourself.

"What I represent is truth...the Jews wanted no truth to be told if it conflicted with their selfish desires. They did not care for the truth; they only wanted to hear that which made them comfortable in their web of lies and deceit."
Farrakhan, speech to the National Press Club, 7/30/84

"I find [Farrakhan's statements regarding Jews] to be reprehensible and morally indefensible...I discourage his participation. Neither anti-Semitism or anti-Black statements have any place in our party."
Jesse Jackson, the Boston Herald, 6/29/84

"The truth hurts."
Farrakhan, agreeing with an aide that Jewish doctors inject the AIDS virus into Black babies.
NY Times,5/23/88

"Farrakhan's major message of affirming Black identity, self-respect, and economic advancement is one that could and should be heard. All to often, unfortunately, he has made anti-Jewish sentiments and statements a central part of that message. He has also made derogatory remarks about other minority groups as well as Blacks who disagree with him.
I hope that at UMASS Farrakhan will focus on that which is positive and can unite all those who would like to work together for racial justice and equality.
If he can publicly renounce his anti-Semitism and other divisive statements he could make it possible for many more people to work together.
Saul Perlmutter, UMASS Hillel Rabbi

"Now that nation called Israel never has had any peace in 40 years and she never will have any peace, because there can be no peace structured on injustice, theivery, lying and deceit and using the name of God to shield your gutter religion under His holy and righteous name."
Farrakhan, speech on WBEE radio, 6/30/84

"The N.A.A.C.P. deplores the inflammatory statements that are being made by Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan that labeled Judaism a "gutter religion" and cast Israel as a criminal nation...the N.A.A.C.P.'s established policy supports the right of Israel to exist. We continue to believe that this is a morally sound policy."
Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the N.A.A.C.P.

"[My duty is] to expose this wickedness and lay it bare" so that "the people of this earth will never again be deceived by those who come in the name of God, cloaking themselves in the robes of God, but are in fact members of the synagogue of Satan."
Farrakhan, NY Times, 5/28/84

"Some students who have advocated Mr. Farrakhan's appearance point to positive aspects of his message, such as those involving self-reliance and racial pride. These sentiments have too often, however, been marred by hostile expressions of anti-Jewish sentiments. I find this aspect of Mr. Farrakhan's message to be offensive and contradictory to the values of this University and of our society at large."
Chancellor Joseph Duffey

"Don't push your 6 million down our throats."
Farrakhan, Los Angeles Times, 9/17/85

"The Jews cannot defeat me. I will grind them and crush them into little bits."
Farrakhan, NY Post, 5/23/88

"We in the Southern Leadership Conference do not believe we can overcome one evil by substituting another for it. For the Black man to be anti-Semitic is not only irrational but immoral too. And wherever we have seen anti-Semitism, we have condemned it with all our might."
Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., March 1968

Farrakhan may not say anything blatantly bigoted in his UMASS speech, since he often tones down his message for college audiences. Indeed, we hope that Farrakhan separates himself from his previous statements. Ultimately, though, it is up to you to educate yourself. Attend the video screening of his anti-Semitic speech in Madison Square Garden today and tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Campus Center 917. Or drop by the Hillel office and talk to someone. Or attend the panels and discussions sponsored by the Office of Human Relations. Many have chosen to protest quietly by participating in the Vigil for Diversity and Dialogue beginning at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium and proceeding to the Fine Arts Center.
You don't have to see Farrakhan in person to educate yourself. At one speech he told the audience that their mere attendance showed that "You support me! You support me!" Power lies in numbers, and hearing Farrakhan lends credence to his views.

UMASS is a place to learn, but Farrakhan is not the person to educate.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writers or cartoonists and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Are the 'friendly' skies the safest way to travel?

Flying is the safest way to travel. But recent commercial aircraft mishaps have given passengers reason to dispute this often-boasted fact.
While boarding a plane, passengers must find hard to forget such incidents as the Aloha Airlines Boeing 737 that lost part of its roof last year in midflight and the Eastern Airlines 727 whose fuselage in December cracked at 21,000 feet, forcing the jet to make an unscheduled landing in Charleston, W. Va.

Pedro Pereira

Other incidents, such as airplanes in motion losing engines, are enough to make one want to cancel that badly-deserved Florida vacation. When driving a loved one to the airport one wonders if the person will ever come back.
Besides instilling fear, the alarming state of the US commercial airliner fleet should cause anger. It is appalling that the airliners in one of the world's most affluent countries have reached such a state.
Commercial airliners are on average 14 years old, and 43 percent of the aircraft in which Americans travel were built in the 1960s. It doesn't take a genius to figure out airplanes that old would suffer mechanical breakdowns and fuselage corrosion. Unfortunately for passengers, whose lives are at stake every time they fly, American airlines caught on slowly to the obvious problems.
Now they feel the urgent necessity of purchasing new planes, but manufacturers can only build so many aircraft in a hurry. Time magazine reported in December that the Washington state-based aircraft manufacturer Boeing, the world's largest, has a record backlog of 1,102 orders. The European manufacturer Airbus has a backlog of 555 and the American McDonnell Douglas 320.
The airlines' belated concern over replacing aging aircraft eliminates some fears, but the huge backlogs trigger a new set of worries. Manufacturers have enough orders to last through the coming decade. But will they become negligent in construction procedures and safety inspections by trying to rush the orders through?
We've already witnessed flaws in some brand new aircraft, such as crossed wires in some of Airbus' products.
Boeing, too, has suffered criticism for faulty aircraft. In fact, the company could still be sued for the crash of a Japan Airlines 747 in 1985, which killed 520. Investigators concluded sloppy repairs by Boeing caused the accident.
Strangely enough, however, passenger travel worldwide is increasing at about 7 percent a year. And, it appears the growth will continue for several years, unless a much-feared repression that some economists forecast for the early '90s comes true.
Should such forecasts prove erroneous, however, the growing number of passengers will have no choice but to take about a 50 percent chance of travelling in 20-year-old planes. By the time today's 20-year-old aircraft become replaced, new 20-year-old planes will need replacement, which means about 50 percent of the American commercial fleet will still be inadequate.
The lesson is clear: airlines shouldn't wait to substitute their aircraft until there is a passenger boom and half their fleets are falling apart. The replacement must be continuous.
Some lives could be saved.

Let's tell Beacon Hill schools deserve funds

The next few months could possibly be the most crucial time in the recent history of the University of Massachusetts. The state is in a severe fiscal crisis as well as the 28 public colleges and universities in the commonwealth. The chance that higher education could be financially debilitated due to inadequate funding by the state is great. Many sectors across higher education are realizing this. There is much preparation being made to try and stop any attempt to underfund public higher education.

Stephanie Orefice

As students, we are the most valuable commodity in the fight to save public higher education. We are the living proof of that state supported education is worth the investment. Many of us have lived in Massachusetts most of our lives. Most of us have and will continue to work in Massachusetts, and most importantly, we are exactly who public higher education was created to serve.
The idea behind public colleges and universities was a simple one. A state would put money into a state-run institution, and would support it. Students in that state would pay nominal, or in some cases no, tuition to attend. The schools would train the students to be skilled individuals, who would then go out and work in the state. These schools would be quality institutions, providing an education as good, if not better, than most private ones. Sounds great doesn't it?
Many states still work this way. In mid-western states, public institutions are funded greatly. Minnesota, Ohio, Indiana and California are all examples of states that have adhered to the mission of public higher education. In the Northeast, the mission was lost. States such as Massachusetts, New York, Vermont and Connecticut have looked at the institutions in their boundaries and have seen Harvard, Yale, Columbia, and Bennington. They have not been able to see UMass and UConn in the distance. Well, it is time to break out.
It is time to tell Beacon Hill that our linguistics, chemistry and sociology departments are ranked among the top ten in their fields, according to the Conference Board of Associate Research Councils. We should let them know that our Polymer Science Center is among the top university polymer research centers in the world. Tell them that UMass is one of only 11 institutions in the country that was chosen for the Digital Equipment Corporation Campus-wide Investment Program. The Boston legislatures need to know that our faculty is one of the best in the nation. Tell them that in New England, we are only second to MIT in the number of Presidential Young Investigators faculty awards. We have six Fullbright award winners on our faculty, two in Spanish and Portuguese alone. Our alumni include the presidents of Heritage-NIS Bank, Spaulding, Four-M Corporation, Monsanto, Monarch Capital, Amtrek, Scientific Atlanta, and General Electric, and entertainers and artists such as Natalie Cole and Paul Theroux, New York Knicks coach Rick Pitino, and the Governor of Vermont Madeline Kunin.
The students of this have a bright future, but that future will be dimming if our funding falls. The Student Government Association is asking every student to make at least one effort in our drive to let Boston know that continued, strong financial support is in everyone's interest. There are many things you can do. The SGA is sending state representatives copies of students' registration forms to illustrate the oversubscribed class problem. This year was a particularly bad year due to funding. Write a letter to your state representative telling him about your positive experience at UMass and describing how the budget cuts hurt you. Get involved now. The future of UMass depends upon it.

An add-drop slumber party gets you ahead

Add/Drop time again. Masses of people line the halls like pregnant snakes. Unfortunate souls group themselves for casual conversation, or stare intently at a paint spot left on the floor by some ancient repainting. Others appear to be meditating until rebellious snores climb from their noses and wake them with a snort.
Every semester the sights are the same: students crawling from their dorm rooms early in the morning to wait through interminable lines, only to find the class they want has a waiting list three pages long. Many of them must then get in another line to wait for another class, which they find has a waiting list six pages long.

Karl Rookey

Some persist long enough to finagle their way into classes they need, but many of us are not that motivated or are cursed with professors who either can't or won't allow another student into their class.
In these cases, summer courses or membership in the Intercollegiate Five-year Club become a very real possibility, and for those who experience chronic oversubscribed courses, indigestion and Alka-seltzer become household words. Some may even have acquired ulcers as a result of registration.
Though it is too late to help with this semester's registration woes, here are some tips for making next year's biannual nightmare more like a daydream:
First, relax:
Unnecessary tension can lead to very nasty headaches. Remember that college is just a huge joke that nobody really understands. If you can laugh about registration day, the rest of the semester will be a regular riot.
Second (and more practical), be first in line:
About a year ago, just out of curiosity, I approached the individual occupying the privileged position of "number one," and asked how he had managed it. "Easy," he said. "I just got here at six-thirty."
By my calculations, unless he had slept in his clothes and skipped his morning shower, he had gotten up no later that five-thirty to accomplish such a feat. To beat him there you would have to get up at five a.m. (four-thirty if you're slow). In order to avoid the inconvenience and bleary, bloodshot eyes, I propose a slumber party as the solution.
Gather several friends, sleeping bags, pillows, pizzas, some beer (of course), and other essentials, and spend the eve of registration day already in line.
Third (and most often proposed by disgruntled students), change the system:
Since we are paying the salaries of the faculty, I propose that they shoulder the burden of long waits and disappointments. Under my system, professors and administrators would sign up before each semester for the students they want (none of whom will be available) and during each registration day, stand in lines outside the various dormitories. After several hours of waiting, they will find the student they want is already oversubscribed, with no waiting list, and have to settle for another, less desirable student.
Of course I know the secret to solving all this nonsense:
Last semester I turned my registration form in on the last day, almost on the last hour, of pre-registration. The Registrar must start with the bottom of the pile, because I got all my classes.

In other news . . .

It's a dirty job, but somebody has to do it. For the past several months seven employees of the Federal Communications Commission have gone to a special room, turned on tape recorders and spent hours listening to pronographic telephone messages. They are trying to enforce legislation passed last year to crack down on the growing dial-a-porn industry. So far the task has proven a lot harder than regulators expected. When Congress added tougher criminal penalties for pornography to a drug bill last April, it accidentally weakened the FCC's authority to impose civil sanctions. The dial-a-porn firms are also a moving target. Investigators recently called a Washington number only to be given D.C. lottery results.
Despite the frustrations, the FCC plans to bring new cases withing a few months. Some local telephone companies have helped by banning or restricting access to dial-a-porn. The agency's toughest problem may be deciding how raunchy the messages can be. After Congress vcoted to outlaw "indecent"or "obscene"calls, courts blocked the ban on the tamer indecent messages.

ARTS & LIVING

Words of the blues with Taj Mahal

From Staff Reports

Taj Mahal sits in his dressing room, dressed casually in a multi-colored jacket, faded blue jeans and a yellow and green checked baseball cap. His tan sandals have palm trees painted on them, and he's talking about the influence of blues on our culture.

"You can live in the biggest WASP community going," he says. "And the 1-4-5 progression is still going to affect you. It's not rock, man, it's the blues."

Taj Mahal is a big, friendly man who waves his hands and looks at you with dark brown eyes when he talks. He's been performing for over 30 years, in America, Canada, Asia and Africa, and spends over 200 days out of the year on the road.

"Music is the Universal Language," he says. "Those fake little boundries people draw on maps don't exist. Whether we like it or not, the whole world is connected. Music soothes, man. It all helps."

Taj Mahal is a talkative, intelligent man, who accents his conversations with rich, throaty laughs. He talks about performing in Africa ("they finally got to hear the music they've had to listen to from so far away"), doing shows in rednecked logging camps ("two notes, and the place was a sea of fists,") and the record industry ("records make you a lot of friends you don't know, who all want something from you,").

Taj Mahal is a very interesting man.

On stage, after the interview, the announcer calls his name, and he weaves his way through a wildly applauding crowd, walks up on stage and loops his accoustic guitar around his neck, takes a few seconds to tune up, tentatively plays a chord, then launches into a tune, blowing everyone away.

He plays "Stagger Lee," singing in his gravelly voice, his hands wrenching the chords from the guitar. He plays "Light Rain," and his fingers barely brush the strings, producing haunting echoing notes which sound like rain pattering on a window. He plays blues, alternating between delicate, soft lines and searingly loud riffs. He sings and howls, his feet stomping the floor, sweat dripping from his glistening black skin, his head shaking from side to side.

He has the audience in the palm of his hand. When he tells them to sing, they sing. When he asks them to whistle, they whistle, the crowd trying to warble over his guitar.

He plays New Orleans-style blues piano, mercilessly pounding the shaking, groaning keys, and he sings Leadbelly while swaying back and forth on the piano seat. His left hand wanders in a walking bass while his right hand smashes the keyboard.

And at the end, the crowd whistles and stomps the floor, and Taj Mahal comes back and plays another blues number, then tells everyone to drive home safely. The crowd, realizing it's over, slowly filters out of the Iron Horse, humming "Stagger Lee" and feeling, like Taj Mahal does, happy with the world.

Diversity reigns at Iron Horse cafe

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

This semester, as students return from Christmas vacation to face another gruelling 15 weeks of classes, the Iron Horse cafe in Northampton, currently celebrating its 10th anniversary, is hoping to provide something for everyone. Judging from the diverse line-up of acts playing in the next couple of weeks, they are certainly on the right track.

Tomorrow night sees the return of acclaimed Seattle trio, Uncle Bonsai, with their eccentric brand of folk, singing about everything from Freudian fixations to beached whales. Showtimes are 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. and we're informed that this is the last chance you'll have to catch Uncle Bonsai round these parts until 1990.

This coming Sunday, Steve Forbert, whose recent album, Streets of This Town has earned him widespread critical acclaim, will be dropping in to play two shows. Forbert, once hailed as the new Dylan in some quarters, is currently enjoying a resurgence in his career after a long slump, thanks in part to E-Street Band bassist, Gary Tallent, who collaborated with him on the current LP. Check Forbert out for yourself, when he plays the Iron Horse this weekend. Shows once again at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.

The following night, Monday 6, there's a special treat for all you New Ageists, when virtuoso French-Algerian guitarist, Pierre Bensusan, demonstrates why he is currently regarded as one of the hottest pickers in the business. This former Windham Hill artist, now signed to CBS, mixes a wide range of styles from jazz and European folk, to North African, blues and beyond. Show begins at 7 p.m.

Finally, next Friday, Feb. 10, bluesman, Robert Jr. Lockwood, adopted son of the legendary Robert Johnson, will be appearing for one show, beginning at 8:30 p.m. Lockwood, something of a legend himself, was Sonny Boy Williamson's original guitarist on the King Biscuit radio show, and went on to record with the singer on the Chicago based Chess record label. He has also worked with Muddy Waters and Otis Spann. Performances at numerous blues festivals around the country, coupled with the recent reissue of the Chess back catalogue have put Lockwood back into circulation. Don't miss this chance to hear the man's unique talent.

The managers of the Iron Horse would like to stress that all ages are welcome to all of the above shows, so check 'em out.

Breaking the barriers of media jazz dualism

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

Hello and welcome to this new column! Throughout the coming semester, I hope to inform and maybe entertain you with record reviews, concert reviews and other info pertaining to the music called "jazz." This introductory column should give you some idea of what is to come and with how many grains of salt you should take my opinions.

So what is "jazz" anyway? The word itself is a euphemism for sex that has its origins in West Africa, and was used by white customers of turn-of-the-century New Orleans brothels to describe the music played there (by blacks). Its racist connotations have led many to reject the term in favor of "Black Classical," "Afro-American Instrumental Music," "Great Black Music" or no label at all. However, I will stick to "jazz" simply because it is a widely understood means of identification. Worse, no one agrees on an exact definition of jazz; this owes as much to its ever-evolving nature as to the inadequacy of such labels in general.

The music industry, via its hired thug, Billboard magazine, divides today's jazz scene further into two labels: "traditional jazz" and "contemporary jazz." This division reflects the fact that jazz is caught between the western notions of "art" and "popular music."

"Traditional jazz" is the industry's approach to the "art" side of the music, its attempt to make jazz conform to "respectable" music conventions. It has a Standard Repertoire and rigid criteria for excellence, and is most at home in conservatories and concert halls. In general, traditional jazz stays within the framework of "Bebop" (i.e. music that developed between the early 1940s and the late 50s), which represented the limits of how far one could apply western musical theory to Afro-American music. Conformance to fixed standards, in both technique and material, are more important than innovation in traditional jazz; critic Gene Santoro referred to it as "dotting Bird's 'i's and crossing Dizzy's 't's." Its best known exponent is trumpeter Wynton Marsalis.

"Contemporary jazz" on the other hand, is a more popular form of the music that stays close to current trends in pop music, such as soul, funk and rock. Purists argue that it is too blatantly commercial to be called "jazz" at all; yet one must remember that several older styles of jazz that purists considered "legitimate" (such as Swing and Rhythm-and-Blues) were, in their day, as designed for popular appeal as the music of contemporary jazz artists like George Benson and Grover Washington is today. Nevertheless, contemporary jazz's commercial orientation also leaves little room for innovation.

Unfortunately, the gap between these two industry-created genres is widening, and as usual, whatever doesn't happen to fit the labels gets ignored. In the yawning chasm between traditional and contemporary jazz, there is a lot of exciting music, and that is what I would like to emphasize in this column. I argue that the real innovation in jazz - the Tradition in Transition (a phrase coined by saxophonist Chico Freeman) - takes place outside the boundaries of traditional and contemporary jazz. So who are the new innovators? Stay tuned.

Stress rising in college freshmen

Collegian Staff Report

WASHINGTON — The level of stress among college freshmen is rising rapidly, according to an survey of more than 300,000 freshmen, the Washington Post reported early this month.

The survey, conducted by the American Council on Education and the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California at Los Angeles, found a record number of students who reported they are frequently depressed an an increasing number said they feel "overwhelmed by all I have to do."

The increased stress, also reflected by a rise in cigarette smoking after years of steady decline, could be linked to the sharply increased competition for college admissions, according to the authors of the study.

"Things are beginning to change in alarming directions," said Alexander W. Astin, director of the survey and a professor of higher education at UCLA.

"We have very high suicide rates among college students now. We have tremendous pressures on young people to achieve," Astin said. "It's something that's got to be watched."

More than 10 percent of freshmen reported frequently "feeling depressed," compared with 8.2 percent in 1985. More than 21 percent reported feeling overwhelmed, compared with 16 percent in 1985. And more than 10 percent reported that they smoked cigarettes frequently, compared with 8.9 percent in 1987. By comparison, 16.6 percent said they were frequent smokers in 1966.

"Students are becoming more competitive," Astin said. "They've raised their aspirations and they want to grab a hold of anything that will increase their competitive edge. It is something that is happening in the whole society, and students are just a reflection of that."

Conte starts 16th term with full agenda

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Controlling the budget deficit is the nation's top priority and Rep. Silvio O. Conte has made this position clear to President Bush, according to aide Michael Marvin.

Marvin said Conte, R-Pittsfield, is confident that President Bush will improve inter-governmental relations and work on reducing the deficit.

"Almost immediately following the election, [Conte] wrote to George stressing that we must keep the deficit as our number one priority," he said.

Conte, beginning his 16th term in the House, is working with the African nation of Sudan, in an effort to help that nation solve its famine and homelessness problems. He met with Sudanese Ambassador Hassan El-Amin El-Bashir on Dec. 20.

The congressman previously wrote to The Hon. Sadiq al-Mahdi, Sudan's prime minister, and expressed concern that relief organizations sent to assist the nation were expelled or delayed, and charged the government with using food as a weapon in its ongoing civil war.

Marvin said the meeting attracted more attention to the existing problems in Sudan, and Conte is hopeful that the nation will heed international pressure to rid its people of starvation and homelessness.

"We're finding it's finally beginning to get some of the attention it deserves," he said. "I think we're beginning to see action."

It is unclear whether monetary aid will be cut off to Sudan if efforts to assist its people are stalled, but Marvin said the action is a viable option.

Conte is also working for solutions to problems in Nicaragua and El Salvador, seeking "economic relief over military solutions," Marvin said.

The congressman is also preparing to introduce legislation for acid rain reduction, a "user fee" bill to raise revenue for the Coast Guard, and a resolution declaring the 1990s the "Decade of the Brain" to promote research into brain diseases and mental health.

Marvin said Conte is considered to be a "national leader" in sponsoring the resolution expressing the House of Representatives' opposition to an oil import fee.

"People who use oil as a home heating source will be very affected," he said. "People should never have to choose between eating and keeping their home warm."

The five bills recently introduced by Conte are:

- To prohibit the awarding of federal contracts to consistent labor law violators.
- To make retirement benefits a mandatory subject of collective bargaining.
- To provide an additional standard deduction of $600 for deaf taxpayers, their spouses, or dependents.
- To provide tax credit for the pro-ration of Social Security benefits in the month of a recipient's death.
- To provide a targeted job's tax credit for employing certain older individuals

Hurt's success with Tourist is no accident

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

There has been an interesting trend developing recently in American Cinema. It seems that the "middle-brow" movie is back in vogue. The past month alone has seen the release of a spate of intelligent, well written, adult pictures including Barry Levinson's Rain Man and the sophisticated Mike Nichols comedy, Working Girl. And now that most versatile of directors, Lawrence Kasdan (The Big Chill, Body Heat) has given us an excellent screen version of Anne Tyler's bestselling novel, The Accidental Tourist.

William Hurt plays Macon Leary, a writer of travel guides for people who'd rather stay at home. Unable to come to terms with his son's tragic death or the disintegration of his marriage to wife, Sarah (Kathleen Turner) Leary sleepwalks through life, until he meets kooky dog trainer, Muriel (Geena Davis) who through love eventually awakens him to himself and the outside world.

In his best role since Molina in Hector Babenco's Kiss of the Spiderwoman, Hurt is perfectly cast as the dazed, glassy-eyed Leary. The subtle changes he effects in the character make you believe that by the end of the picture he really has "travelled" within himself.

Almost as good is Geena Davis who in Muriel creates a heroine of genuine warmth and spirit, a woman who refuses to lie down to the accidents of fate which have befallen her.

Of course the point is that the accidents of life which Leary regards as annoying setbacks, can be a positive force for change and renewal. Leary's accident at the beginning of the film is caused by his inability to control his dog, the only tangible link he has left with his dead son, and it is this lack of control which causes him to seek the help of Muriel. The dog acts as a symbol for Leary's grief which, Muriel teaches him, can also be brought under control through love and understanding.

This is in turn neatly paralleled by the sudden back trouble Leary experiences while working in Paris. As his wife Sarah flies over to help carry out his work and nurse him back to health, Leary realises that he has never taken control over his own life, that he has always left decisions to others, and armed with this fresh insight realises that he must now "take steps."

It is to Kasdan's credit that he doesn't overdo the symbolism, instead leaving us to read the film in the same way we would the book. In fact throughout he manages to maintain the tone of Turner's novel, a delicate balance of quirkiness and poignancy, and for the most part avoids the Hollywood brush strokes that could so easily have reduced the film to the level of superior melodrama.

The Accidental Tourist is instead that most rare of things, a remarkable portrayal of unremarkable lives.

STAND UP FOR SOLIDARITY IN THE COMMON STRUGGLE FOR HUMAN DIGNITY

On Thursday, February 2, the UMASS campus stands in danger of being torn apart and polarized: Blacks and Whites; Muslims, Jews and Christians.

Join us in a Candlelight Vigil for Diversity and Human Dignity on Thursday, February 2. We will gather in the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:30 p.m. and walk as a group to stand quietly and peacefully outside the Fine Arts Center. (The vigil will be completed before the beginning of the Farrakhan talk in the FAC and the Jewish Arts Festival performance in Bowker Auditorium.)

Inside the Fine Arts Center, Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam, will be holding forth. His words are well-documented. Speaking about the "narrow-minded common Jew," he said: "I will grind them and crush them to bits." (New York Post May 23, 1988.)About Christians: they "preach love but practice hate and tyranny, use God to cover up their corrupt and dirty practices."(Northeastern University, April 20, 1985.)

Outside the Fine Arts Center, Mordecai Levy, head of the militant Jewish Defense Organization, will be holding forth. His words are well documented. Levy, who follows Farrakhan from campus to campus, has said elsewhere: "Within 90 days Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam will be wiped out." (San Diego State University), and "we called Farrakhan's people...and said we'd be very happy he came because we'd break both his legs." (State University of Albany)

Farrakhan and Levy specialize in building barriers between people. They polarize, they divide, they sow fear for their own ends. They try to build their followers' strength on the false foundation of fear and hatred, which serves only to divide and weaken what could be a common struggle for human rights, dignity, and equality. The extremism of one nurtures the extremism of the other. If we are silent, they can set in motion a vicious cycle that can tear this campus apart, pitting one group against the other.

We must not let bigotry and extremism take over UMASS.

LET US SHOW THAT THE HANDS THAT LINKED ONE END OF THE CAMPUS TO THE OTHER ON OCTOBER 27 WILL NOT BE BROKEN APART ON FEBRUARY 2!

WE REJECT ANTI-SEMITISM AND RACISM, EXTREMISM AND SCAPEGOATING, VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. when he said:
"It is not only that anti-Semitism is immoral, though that alone is enough. It is used to divide Negro and Jew who have effectively collaborated in the struggle for justice. It injures Negroes because it upholds the doctrine of racism which they have the greatest stake in destroying."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of the Rev. Jesse Jackson when he said:
"I find [Farrakhan's statements regarding the Jews] to be reprehensible and morally indefensible...I discourage his participation. Neither anti-Semitism or anti-Black statements have any place in this party."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of Pastor Niemoller, a Protestant minister imprisoned by the Third Reich, when he said:
"In Germany they first came for the communists; I did not speak because I was not communist. Then they came for the Jews; I did not speak because I was not a Jew. Then they came to fetch the workers, members of trade unions; I did not speak because I was not a trade unionist. Afterward, they came for the Catholics; I did not say anything because I was a Protestant. Eventually they came for me, and there was no one left to speak."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of Imam Wallace Deen Muhammad when he said:
"What Farrakhan teaches is not at all what we believe in. Islam believes that Jews, Christians and Muslims share an affinity, we believe in one and the same God, we represent one humanity."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of Rabbi Albert Vorspan when he said:
"It is in the deepest of self-interest for us as Jews and for the American people to create a society which cherishes diversity and which builds unity in diversity,"

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of the ancient rabbis of the Mishnah when they taught:
Why was the first human created as a single individual? For the sake of peace and harmony, so that no one might say to another: "My ancestor was better than yours." We are all descended from one common ancestor.

Come together in the struggle against racism and anti-Semitism. Let us unite in the common effort to build a better society for all.

Histor will rebuild from ashes

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a three-alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"It's a disappointment," he said. "The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. But we'll come out of it. The club will survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the club during the fire which started near the club's function room at 5 a.m. yesterday, leaving only locker room standing, John J. Sheehy said.

At least 16 dead after plane crash

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — A military tanker plane carrying 19 people crashed yesterday on takeoff at Dyess Air Force Base, killing at least 16 people, the Air Force said.

The KC-135A tanker crashed in a ball of flame near the south end of a runway, Air Force officials said. The wreckage scattered over a wide area and still burned more than an hour after the crash.

Airman 1st Class Lois Morrell, speaking from Dyess, said at least 16 people were killed.

The plane's crew "never got it off the ground," said Vernon Wright, 19, who was on his way home when he saw the crash.

"The first thing I saw was just this mushroom of smoke...I thought they were having a fire drill," he said.

"I heard the plane as it was coming down," said Skeet Jackson, an eyewitness. "Engines were backfiring and missing. It curved off to the left and crashed.

Witness says Tower unfit for position

WASHINGTON (AP) — A conservative activist told the Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday that he encountered Defense Secretary-designate John Tower in an inebriated condition on several occasions accompanied by women other than his wife.

The witness, Paul Weyrich, chairman of the Free Congress Foundation, has opposed Tower's nomination on grounds he is soft on Star Wars. Yesterday, Weyrich questioned whether Tower had the moral character to oversee the Pentagon reforms that President Bush has promised he would initiate.

"I have made enough personal observations of this man here in Washington to have serious reservations about his moral character," Weyrich said.

Weyrich claimed that Bush's transition team received hundreds of letters criticizing Tower, some containing specific allegations of "moral impropriety" against the nominee, but did not bring the letters to the president's attention.

Weyrich said he never saw the letters, but "I have encountered the senator in a condition lacking sobriety as well as with women he was not married to."

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the panel, immediately suggested that discussions of any information Weyrich had on the nominee's personal life be taken up in a closed session scheduled yesterday afternoon. Tower was to testify in that session.

Tower was dogged by allegations of drinking and womanizing before his nomination was announced by Bush. In divorce papers filed by his second wife, Lila Burt Cummings, Tower was accused of "marital misconduct."

Bush has defended Tower, saying an FBI background check found nothing that would prevent him from serving as defense secretary.

Tower, a 63-year-old Texas Republican, served 24 years in the Senate, including a brief tenure as chairman of the Armed Services Committee from 1981-84.

"He considers SDI (Strategic Defense Initiative) a bargaining chip. We don't," Weyrich has said previously. "He's not in favor of military reform. We think military reform is necessary particularly in this year of budget crunch."

Tower told the committee last week he does not "believe that we can devise an umbrella that can protect the entire American population from nuclear incineration. I think that's unrealistic."

Tower said a more limited system might work but cautioned that "it remains to be seen whether that is a realistic objective."

In his two days of testimony, Tower also pledged to remain objective in Pentagon decision-making despite receiving more than $1 million in consulting fees from defense contractors.

WORLD & NATION

American teens poor in math and science

WASHINGTON (AP) — American teen-agers came out at the bottom of the heap in a survey of math and science performances among students in five countries and four Canadian provinces, the Educational Testing Service reported yesterday.

The low math performance levels are "a matter for grave concern" while the science results "are sobering and pose a serious challenge to our position in the world community," according to the report, called "A World of Differences."

The ETS study is its first international assessment of educational progress, a counterpart to the group's periodic national assessments in various academic fields. It was financed by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Education.

Findings were based on tests of approximately 24,000 13-year-olds in Ireland, Korea, Spain, the United Kingdom, the United States, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec. The last three were divided into French and English-speaking samples.

In all countries and provinces, the more time spent watching television, the poorer student performance was in both math and science, the report found. And in all but two, more than 50 percent of the students reported spending an hour or less each day doing homework in all their subjects. The exceptions were Ireland and Spain, where two hours or more was the norm.

The survey revealed that almost all US 13-year-olds have mastered math basics and know everyday science facts. But ETS notes that "national assessments consistently reveal a weakness in higher-order thinking skills" and this is borne out in the international assessment.

Korean students demonstrated the highest overall mathematics achievement while those from the United States and Ontario (the French speakers) showed the lowest.

Despite their poor performance, the ETS report said, two-thirds of US students said they considered themselves "good at mathematics." Only 23 percent of Korean students, the highest achievers, shared that attitude.

That only 40 percent of the US students can solve two-step problems "is a matter for grave concern," ETS said. Percentages for more complicated tasks "are even more modest and suggest that the pool of trained talent from which to draw our future scientists, engineers and technicians is small indeed."

More than 100 murdered in USSR in January

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government, in keeping with a new policy to disclose crime statistics, said yesterday that 111 murders were committed in the entire country in January, including one policeman killed in the line of duty.

Militia Col. Yuri Arshenevsky, a spokesman for the Interior Ministry, was quoted by Tass as saying previously classified crime statistics henceforth "will be available for everyone."

The first figures released as part of the new policy showed 93 of the 111 January murders had been solved and that most "were committed at home due to drunkenness and jealousy," the official news agency said.

In January 1988, New York City reported 152 cases of murder and nonnegligent manslaughter.

Tass said 137 holdups were committed in January 1989, only 61 of which were solved. The report added that drivers of unregistered taxis increasingly are being victimized.

"One militia serviceman was killed this month when performing his official duty of maintaining public order, and 12 were injured," the report said. It added the militia personnel, the Soviet Union's uniformed police force, used firearms 11 times during the month and that investigation showed each case was justifiable.

Arshenevsky said the ministry will begin publishing a statistical bulletin and "in due course, possibly, all people who wish will be able to subscribe to it."

Soviet authorities used to provide no information about domestic crime, and the state-controlled media ignored the subject, but under President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of greater openness, the subject often is discussed in the media. Some particularly noteworthy cases, such as airplane hijackings and even the recent firebombing of a private cooperative restaurant in Moscow are widely reported.

Poor to be told about tax benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of the nation's poorest working families are missing out on a federal check of up to $874 a year, and dozens of labor, church and business groups began a campaign yesterday to let them know about it.

Working families with children and incomes of up to $18,576 may qualify for a portion of the earned-income tax credit. If they qualify, their tax bills could be wiped out completely — and they could get a check even if they owe know tax.

The Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a non-profit Washington-based organization that keeps an eye on federal actions affecting low and middle-income Americans, is coordinating a drive to educate potential recipients of the credit. The campaign is being underwritten by organized labor, the US Catholic Conference, the Conference of Mayors and other groups as diverse as Planned Parenthood and Vietnam Veterans of America.

"We are concerned that millions of low-income working families with children may miss out on a valuable benefit they have earned," Robert Greenstein, director of the center, told reporters.

UMass with 27, followed by Rafer Giles with 14.

The game marked the fourth time this season that UMass had been scorched for 100 points, just two days after the Minutemen had turned that same trick in a winning cause for the first time in 12 years.

Saturday night, freshmen Anton Brown and McCoy combined for 50 points as the Minutemen upset Rutgers. Not since a 1977 win over Duquesne had the Minutemen won in a game they had scored over 100 points. It was also UMass' first century-mark performance at the Cage since a 108-38 pasting of Maine in 1974.

Brown scored 26 points for UMass, which picked up its third conference win.

Rutgers was within three, 82-79 with 7:44 remaining but the Minutemen went on a 19-2 run to put the game out of reach.

In the first half, after trailing 12-10, UMass outscored the Scarlet Knights 12-1 over the next three minutes, and Brown's three-pointer gave the Minutemen a 22-13 lead with 13:05 left.

UMass was up by as much as 19, before Rutgers pulled within six, 54-48, at halftime.

McCoy added 24 points for the Minutemen, followed by senior center John Milum with 15.

Emory Ward scored 20 points for Rutgers and Anthony Duckett added 19.

Hoop du jour: McCoy was named Atlantic 10 Conference co-Freshman-of-the-Week for this week.

McCoy, who scored 15 points against Temple and 24 against Rutgers, shared the honor with Tracy Shelton of West Virginia. He has won or shared the honor three of the past four weeks . . . UMass will play next on Monday, when it travels to Worcester to face Holy Cross. The Minutemen do not return to the Cage until Feb. 13 against St. Joseph's.

UMass plays just three more games at home, including dates with Penn State (Feb. 23) and George Washington (Feb. 25). Not many more chances to see the Minutemen in action this year without traveling. But if you think that's bad, how would you like to be a student at UConn (surely you wouldn't, but just suppose for the case of argument)? The Huskies play just four games on campus all season, with all of their big home dates, including every game on the Big East schedule, being played at the Hartford Civic Center.

Achilles problem, and of course UMass misses the services of junior guard Michele Pytko, who injured her knee in the Bath Ironworks Classic and, after surgery is out for the season.

"Overall I was really pleased," Hewelt said. "Against Rutgers I felt we played better than the score indicated. I feel we held our own. Against St. Joe's we battled back the entire second half."

Still, the Minutewomen have now seen their losing string pushed to four games and the loss side of the scales now heavier than the 'W's. But the team has had a chance to rest since Saturday and will be ready when it gets back into action tomorrow night against the University of Rhode Island at the Cage (7:30 p.m.).

Hoop-la: The schedule does favor the Minutewomen for the rest of the year. Starting with tomorrow's game, UMass will play six of its final 10 games at home. Five of them will be against Atlantic 10 foes, with the only non-league game being a clash with Ivy-Leaguer Harvard University on Feb. 14.

ed an 8.8).

The early loss of high scoring Kristin Turmail, out indefinitely with a foot injury, has not derailed UMass's post-season ambitions. Saturday's near-record team score left the Minutewomen within range to qualify for April's Regional Competetion, to be held at Penn State University.

"We're on track," said Mitchell, "but the next three meets (away vs. Yale, New Hampshire and Southern Connecticut) will really paint the picture. Then we'll know if we still have a legitimate shot."

And though UMass' early season success has left some observers pleasantly surprised, the person on top of the program says he saw it coming all along.

"I knew we were capable of doing it," said Mitchell, "we worked so hard this off-season. I'm not surprised, it's just a pleasure to see it happening."

NFL OK's new free agent set-up

NEW YORK (AP) — Many will be household names. Some may even be legends. Today, many of the NFL's bigbest stars could become free agents when the league puts into effect its new contract plan.

A radical departure from the old free agency system, it is being imposed unilaterally without a union contract and will unconditionally free more than 600 players. Each team will be allowed to protect just 37 of the average of 59 on its roster.

"You'll see Super Bowl players, Pro Bowl players, very big names," said Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys and a member of the owners' Management Council.

"But there will be reasons for them — they'll be bad medical risks, they'll be older. A lot of them will be getting good salaries, own homes in the area, things like that. They won't want to move."

Under the old plan, players offerede a contract by another team could move only after their team waived its rights of first refusal. The new team would also have to compensate the old one with draft choices.

Only two players in 10 years moved under that system, most recently, linebacker Wilber Marshall of Chicago, who signed a $6 million, five-year contract last year with Washington. He joined the Redskins after the Bears declined to match the offer and Chicago got two first-round draft picks in return.

Parts of that system remain in effect — protected players whose contracts have expired still would be subject to first refusal, and teams signing them would have to part with draft choices. The rest, under contract or not, will be free until April 1 to go elsewhere without compensation.

Although few teams have identified unprotected players, the consensus is that most will protect younger players with potential while leaving older, more established players unprotected. The older ones have less incentive to move; high salaries, or injury problems that make them unattractive to prospective bidders.

The Chicago Bears, for example, have already said they will not protect three starters from their 1986 Super Bowl champions, including 31-year-old linebacker Otis Wilson and cornerback Mike Richardson.

Men's hoop wins big, then loses bigger

Minutemen upset Rutgers, fall to UConn

By JIM CLARK
and MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Conn. – The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team hit the road to face rival University of Connecticut Monday night, and when it arrived, found a huge Cliff in its way.

For the better part of eight minutes, the Minutemen were able to avoid it, but eventually they found it to be insurmountable. Six-foot-11 senior center Cliff Robinson was a major obstacle for the Minutemen, as he led the host Huskies to a 104-75 pounding at the packed Storrs Field House.

The loss, the worst of the season which dropped UMass to 8-11 overall, came on the heels of the team's best season outing, a 105-89 win over Rutgers University Saturday night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Robinson finished with a game-high 29 points, 14 rebounds and five steals, while generally clogging up the lane and being a large force in the UConn offense. Many feel that he will be a late first-round NBA draft choice come June.

Robinson's coach, Jim Calhoun, summed up the performance best: "Nobody could stop Cliff."

Not late in the game at least. Robinson had just six points in the first 10 minutes of the game, and not surprisingly, UMass was still well within reach.

After the Huskies took a 6-0 lead in the first :39 seconds behind some aggressive defense, UMass coach John Calipari took a timeout and got his team regrouped. The Minutemen came out firing, as freshman forward Jim McCoy clicked for eight, including a pair of treys that had UMass on the plus side, 15-14 with 12:33 to go in the half.

But then UConn adjusted to the outside bombing tactics of the Minutemen, and Robinson's presence became more felt inside. Sophomore forward John Tate picked up his third foul with 9:06 to go, and Robinson took over from there.

With the lead at 33-26 with 6:30 left, the Huskies went on a 19-7 bolt that ended the half with a large 52-33 lead. It was now suddenly obvious how much better the Big East rivals were, a strong argument for the home team in the growing Big East-Atlantic 10 debate.

After Willie McCloud's three-point play to start the second half, the lead never again dipped below 20. The rest of the game UConn spent thoroughly entertaining the Field House crowd of 4,604, which was buzzing with enthusiasm for a full 40 minutes.

Despite the loss, Calipari was optimistic about his team's showing.

"What can you say? I can't really be down on the kids for losing to a vastly superior team," Calipari said.

Yes, Connecticut was vastly superior, arguably the best team the Minutemen have faced, and will face this season.

"We fought right down to the last second, that's all you can ask for," Calipari said. "Wait until next year when we get them back at the Cage. We'll change our personnel a bit and hopefully do some different things, and we'll be able to give them a much better game than this.

Senior guard Phil Gamble added 17 points for the Huskies, who had four players in double figures. McCoy, the main go-to man in the late blowout stages, led

Recruit gets OK to practice

George Hardin, a 21-year-old recruit for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, will be able to join the team as of yesterday, the Collegian has learned.

Hardin, who transferred during intersession from Salt Lake Community College, was arrested along with former Minutemen David Brown and Duane Chase on Jan. 3 for allegedly breaking into a house in Amherst.

The charges against Hardin were reduced from burglary to breaking and entering in a pre-trial hearing on Jan. 19 and the trial is scheduled for April 6. However, UMass coach John Calipari is allowing Hardin to practice with the team beginning tomorrow, though it is unknown when or if he will begin to dress for games.

In a prepared statement, Calipari said, "Following an ongoing review of George Hardin's situation, we feel he has paid a sufficient penalty for violating team rules and as of [yesterday] he will be allowed to begin practicing with the basketball team."

Women's hoop drops a pair

Lose to Rutgers, St. J's

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Life hasn't gotten any easier for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team.

Last week, the Minutewomen took to the road to face the iron of the Atlantic 10 Conference, Rutgers University and St. Joseph's University. Despite good performances, the Minutewomen were outplayed on both occasions, the resulting losses dropping them under .500 for the first time this season.

From the start of the year, such a thing seemed remote at best. After all, UMass had stormed out of the block to the tune of a 5-0 start under first-year coach Kathy Hewelt.

Since that point though, the Minutewomen have dropped nine of their last 12, mostly against A-10 competition. Last week's losses to the ceiling of the conference prove that UMass still has some improving to do.

On Thursday, the Minutewomen trekked to Piscataway, N.J. where waiting for them were the Lady Knights of Rutgers. This is a team which can consider a 10-3 record and not being in the Top 20 in the country a down year.

Also, Theresa Grentz' squad has lost just once in its last 60 outings at the Louis Brown Athletic Center. The cards were clearly stacked against the Minutewomen in a 96-57 loss.

"Rutgers is an extremely talented basketball team," Hewelt said. "They have some great athletes with some great speed."

And the Knights used that speed to open up a quick lead the UMass couldn't come close to overcoming. Racing out of the blocks, the Knights blew past UMass to a 21-3 lead less than seven minutes into the game.

"They ran the ball down our throats. We were getting only one shot and the selection was not as good as we needed," Hewelt said. "They got four or five long rebounds and just kicked the ball out and went."

Though the Minutewomen were not able to close that gap, they did manage to slow the Knights down.

"I felt we played extremely well when we stopped their break and forced them into the halfcourt game," Hewelt said. "We didn't put our heads down, and we stayed in and battled. We played good basketball, they just outran us."

Rutgers enjoyed a 26-point lead at 51-25 at the intermission and never trailed by less than 25 for the rest of the game, expanding the lead to as much as 43 points at one juncture.

Telicher Austin led the Knights with 23 points, while Trish Riley paced UMass with 14, including a trio of treys late in the game. Christel Zullo added 13 points and Beth Wilbor with 12.

Then on Saturday, UMass went to Philadelphia to face St. Joe's, now installed as the top team in the conference with a 9-0 record. The Lady Hawks got an 85-63 win, but Hewelt again felt that her team had held its own against a tough opponent.

"We played very well. We were close for a while, but then [Ellen] Shields hit three three-pointers and we had to come out on her and that opened it up for [Dale] Hodges inside," Hewelt said.

The Hawks opened up a 15-point halftime edge, 41-26 and were able to hold on to that down the stretch.

Hodges finished as the game high scorer with 29 points while Shields and Kim Foley chipped in with 17. Helen Freeman had 22 for the Minutewomen. However, she was the only UMass player in double figures.

St. Joe's shot 52 percent from the floor (37-for-71) while UMass was at 39 percent (25-of-64).

"We matched up better position for position against St. Joe's," Hewelt said. "I was pleased with the performance of the people off the bench. They came in and gave us some good quality minutes."

Yet the lack of depth is still a problem for UMass. Freeman has been bothered with a knee injury that limited her time against Rutgers. Riley is bothered by an

Gymnasts top Cornell

Minutewomen now 3-0

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Gymnastics is one of those 'fine-tuned' sports, like skiing or figure skating, where the competition is measured in fractions. In Saturday afternoon's win over visiting Cornell, two-tenths of one point separated the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team (3-0) from topping the all time school scoring mark of 177.9 points.

"We really wanted it," explained coach Alfie Mitchell of the effort. "The goal is to break it, and in a lot of places we could have done it. You can find a tenth anywhere."

In posting 177.8 points to Cornell's 169.5, the Minutewomen were led by freshmen Kim Grady and Erin Klier, who both tallied their highest scores to date. Grady added a double back flip to her floor exercise routine ("She nailed it," said Mitchell) en route to a 36.3 all around score, the highest total of the afternoon. Klier followed with a 35.65, which stood as the second highest scoring effort of the meet.

Erika Baxter – UMass's highest scorer so far this winter entering the meet – stumbled on the balance beam before recovering to chip in 34.75 points. Sandy Turcotte led Cornell with a 34.35.

"The freshmen are looking really good," said Mitchell, "I'm getting a lot out of my 'all arounders'; Grady, Klier and Baxter."

For the third consecutive meet UMass's strongest event was the floor exercise, where they scored 45.1 points. Grady's new and improved routine was awarded a team-high 9.2, while Baxter added 9.15 points. Turcotte was Cornell's most successful entry, notching 8.8 points.

The Minutewomen improved most dramatically on the uneven bars, where they recorded 44.75 points (a 4.65 jump over last Saturday's performance vs. Rhode Island). The surge was due in part to the return of Debbie Schultz from knee and ankle injuries (she record-

Anthrax to be subject of public hearing

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Anthrax research at the University of Massachusetts will be the subject of an Amherst public hearing March 2, the town's Board of Health decided last night.

The American Friends Service Committee asked the board to look into health risks from the research, which is conducted in the microbiology department and funded by the Department of Defense.

Anthrax bacillus is an animal disease that can infect and kill humans. It can be used in war to wipe out enemy soldiers or civilian populations.

The AFSC has asked UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey to halt the research, on the basis that it poses a health threat to the community. The committee members also oppose the research because they say it could be used in biological warfare.

The research is part of the US Army's Biological Defense Research Program. Duffey has taken no action to stop the research since receiving the letter.

University officials maintain the research employs a non-virulent strain of the anthrax virus, that it is intended to find a vaccine for the disease.

"This is considered to be research at a very low hazard level," said Valerie Steinberg, safety officer in the UMass division of Environmental Health and Safety.

Steinberg said the UMass researchers use two separate strains of the virus, each of them non-infectious separately, that would form a deadly strain if combined.

"This is a possibility," she said. "I think of it as a very slim possibility because of the safeguards in the laboratory."

She said the only people at risk in an accident would be the researchers, and that the disease is treatable with antibiotics.

Board of Health member George Reed said only 33 cases of the disease had been reported in the United States in the last 21 years, and that no laboratory-associated cases of anthrax have been reported in more than 20 years.

"I don't consider it a health problem," he said. "It is being worked on safely across the country."

Board Chairman Alan Calhoun, who is a physician, said "there are many more hazardous agents in you local hospital's microbiology lab."

The board agreed to hold a public hearing because of the concern town citizens have shown about the research. Board members were not sure whether they could order

Quayle visits Latin America

Political science professors say image at stake

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Political Science professors at the University of Massachusetts have mixed expectations for Vice President Dan Quayle's first excursion to a foreign country in his official capacity.

Quayle left Washington yesterday on a three-day mission as President Bush's emissary to meet with Latin American leaders and discuss the US role in the region. Scheduled stops for Quayle include Venezuela and El Salvador.

The Boston Globe reported yesterday a senior administration official said Quayle will play a "low key role of listener" and will not make pronouncements or seek headlines.

The trip is important to Quayle's image in light of lingering public doubts about his ability to hold high office and will likely be closely watched by journalists around the globe, professors said.

"One can only hope that Quayle is smarter than the impression he gave during the election and his grades in college," said Political Science professor Sheldon Goldman.

"One also hopes he will appear smart, or resonably smart and be a man of integrity," Goldman said.

Goldman said although he has never met Quayle, it is possible that he is his own man, citing Quayle's co-sponsorship of the Jobs Training Bill with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

Goldman said he has known of colleagues that have worked closely with Quayle during his senatorship since 1980 who believe him to be an able orator.

Goldman also said he hopes President Bush's cold gets better, since everytime he sneezes the American populace has an anxiety attack.

Today, Quayle is in Caracas for the inauguration of the Venezuelan president, Carlos Andres Perez, and is expected to continue the bilateral talks he began yesterday with leaders of other Latin American countries. On Friday in El Salvador, Quayle is scheduled to discuss reports of violence and human rights violations in that country.

"He will be acting as the symbol of the US in those coun-

Once again, Red Cross draws blood from students

By JOHN SWANSON

In the basement of the Campus Center, Senior David Ezzo sits with three strangers at a folding table littered with empty Cheez-it wrappers and plastic pins shaped like the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Ezzo, a Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration major, is one of more than 200 students who have donated blood in a three-day Red Cross drive, which ends today, at the University of Massachusetts.

"It goes really smooth," Ezzo said, sporting one of those red "Be nice to me, I just gave blood" stickers.

Unit Assistant Sandy Green, who packs the blood to be sent for tests, said the Red Cross obtained 126 pints from the drive on Monday and 145 pints yesterday.

Nancy Marion, a Red Cross recruiter and donor room aid, said two drives conducted at UMass in January were not nearly as successful as this one, since University enrollment was so low during intersession. Marion said the timing of the drive is also contributing to its success.

"We wanted to give students a chance to donate before the rush of the semester," she said. Unit Supervisor Jean Armitage said the Springfield Red Cross chapter has always had good luck in Amherst. "UMass is fantastic," she said.

Marion said 1,495 units of blood were made available to local patients through donations made on campus last semester.

Armitrage said the Red Cross has increased the number of security measures in the donation process in order to prevent

Home provides more than help

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

At the same time most women her age were preparing to leave Amherst for the holidays, Sarah, who asked that her real name not be used, was moving in.

The 19-year-old, pregnant and unmarried, is living at the Summerhill Home of Amherst, a private home for pregnant single women who wish to continue their pregnancies. Women at the home may keep their babies or give them up for adoption.

Having chosen to keep her child, Sarah is staying at Summerhill while she waits for welfare to provide her enough money for an apartment in the area. She said she was referred to the shelter by a local church group.

"It's the best thing for me now that I'm here," she said. "I know I have a lot of growing up to do. I'm trying to do that now, here, real fast, so it won't be such a shock to me when the baby comes."

Staying at Summerhill has given Sarah a sense of independence, she said. Each of the residents are responsible for shopping, cooking, and keeping the house clean, as well as contributing whatever they can financially.

In addition, she said, the home has provided her with quiet, private time to reflect. "Before I came here I t? thought mothers did it only for themselves. But being here, I realized that for a mother to be able to give up her baby for adoption, she must love it a little bit more than the ones that keep their babies. She realized that she can't raise it herself. That's not selfish.

"Everyone here makes their own decision," she added. "No one pushes you into it."

Of the five women who have stayed at the home, only Sarah has decided to keep her child. "A lot of people tell me that I'm too young. In some ways I think they're right," she said, "but I'm prepared to take on the responsibilities."

Engaged to be married, she said her three-year relationship with her fiance helped her to make this choice. Support at the home, she said, has also aided her decision.

"I knew that I would keep the baby, but I needed to know from a few people that it was OK," she said.

The home is the only privately funded shelter of its kind in Western Massachusetts, according to Nancy Webb, a director at Childrens' Aid and Family Services in Northampton.

Edna Johnson, director of the home, said she realized a shelter for pregnant single women was needed through her work at Birthright, a pro-life organization in Amherst. "I knew there were young women who weren't taking care of themselves, living in tents or in cars, and not getting proper medical care," she said.

The home, at 599 South Pleasant Street, was built last summer by her husband, Richard Johnson, and Gerald Gates, and donated to a trust fund. The shelter is mainly financed by an endowment fund to which private individuals have contributed, Johnson said. All furniture was donated by local merchants, she added.

Johnson said community reaction to the home has been "very positive." About 300 people came to the open house in October to show their support, and volunteers have driven the women to doctors' appointments, and tutored those women still in school, she said.

The duplex has room for six women on one side, and volunteer houseparents Margaret and John Coty on the other. Each of the women have their own bedroom.

Farrakhan loved, hated and debated

By ALLEN BERNARD

Last in a Series of Articles on black-Jewish Relations

Louis Farrakhan, scheduled to speak at the University tonight, is a controversial black leader whose message is taken by some to mean freedom from oppression and by others as fostering dissent and intolerance of certain minority groups.

But even this distinction is not clear cut.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel foundation on campus, said "I think Farrakhan addresses deep well springs of anger and frustration. There are deep hurts and injustices that have been perpetrated on the black community. Farrakhan taps into the feelings about those — which is fully understandable.

"Unfortunately he directs that anger often against Jews as well as South East Asians and other minorities that are more present to where the black community live than the policy makers in Washington who slash programs that have benefited the black community."

Ricardo Townes, associate dean of students for the University, agrees that Farrakhan speaks to a deep need in the black community.

"When Louis Farrakhan speaks, he speaks to some issues that are extremely important to the black community. He makes a very forceful case for black peoples up-lifting in America," he said.

Renai R. Culpepper, a UMass student, wrote in a Collegian editorial debate last semester that "Farrakhan says some strong things that may startle those who are not used to bluntness, but then we live in turbulent times, and we don't need another docile leader."

She goes on to say, "Afro-Americans on this campus need to hear what he has to say, because we need to focus our goals and get a clear direction for the future. We need vision. Farrakhan can open our eyes."

On the other side of that editorial debate, student Alisa Berkowitz wrote, "His [Farrakhan's] message to the black community is so positive that I don't see why he has to taint it with bigotry and hatred."

Perlmutter said, "If Farrakhan spoke only about the black community and his positive message for it and never trashed Jews and others, I think there would be many people who would feel good about him being here."

Farrakhan will speak at the Fine Arts Center today at 7:30 p.m.

Cancer victim awarded postmortem degree

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Even death did not prevent Doris Coss from achieving her goal.

Coss, who died of cancer August 10, 1988, was awarded a postmortem Bachelor of Arts degree in education from the University of Massachusetts on Dec. 16.

Dr. Michael Schwartz, undergraduate advisor of the School of Education, presented the award to Coss' two surviving children, Madeline, 16, and Alex, 14. Schwartz said this is the second postmortem diploma he had presented.

Director of the Bilingual Collegiate Program Benjamin Rodriguez said the Puerto Rican native had spent four years studying at the University when she died at the age of 36. Rodriguez said this was the first such degree given by the program. The ceremony, in the Dean of Students Office, was attended by Rodriguez, former Dean of Students William Field, Assistant Director of BCP Manuela Pacheco, Acting Dean of Students Gladys Rodriguez and Maria Gonzalez, a friend of the deceased.

BCP Director Rodriguez said various individuals and organizations in Amherst raised $6,000 for Coss to return to Puerto Rico for medical attention seven months before her death. Coss also received a plaque from BCP for her "courage, dedication, tenacity and her outstanding example to others," he said.

"When the doctor told her to stay in bed — 'You cannot go to classes' — she still went. She is a role model and we were very proud of her," he said.

GEO continues to fight budget cuts

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Graduate Employees Organization plan to revitalize the battle to become unionized this spring, and will continue to seed state legislation for recognition as state employees.

During two demonstrations in December, graduate students made their opinions known about their financial plight under the budget cuts imposed by Board of Regents of Higher Education.

The graduates contend the security of their stipends is in a state of chaos since they are one of the only non-unionized organizations on campus and thus more vulnerable to budget cuts.

Seth Rothberg, a graduate student in the English department and member of GEO, said he and other graduates hope to stage at least one event each month to show they mean business. "We're going to have a fairly active semester," Rothberg said. "We now have 700 members, which is up from 250 in September and we think we have enough support to push the legislation through."

The graduates await state legislation that would allow them to regulate money used to pay stipends for teaching and research assistants who conduct a significant amount of the introductory courses at UMass.

The proposal, which will change the graduate's line item budget, must pass through various committees before legislative approval, and that process is time consuming, Rothberg said.

GM to close plant, lay off as many as 2,000

FRAMINGHAM (AP) — General Motors Corp. will close its Framingham plant in August, costing as many as 2,000 people their jobs, a company spokesman said yesterday.

Employees were notified shortly before their shift ended at 2:30 p.m., said Ed Dilworth of the automaker.

"We just finished talking to the employees. Russ McCarthy, the plant manager, announced that the Framingham facility will be idled in August of this year," Dilworth said.

Dilworth, group public affairs director in Framingham, said the company decided to close the plant because it had not decided on a new product to manufacture in Framingham.

The factory makes the Buick Century and the Oldmobile Cutlass Ciera, about 300 of them daily.

"There is no product allocated to the Framingham facility after we build out the '89 model," he said.

The plant, which reopened last May after a five-month layoff, currently has 2,100 active employees. An additional 1,200 who were laid off in December 1987 were not rehired.

McCarthy, the plant manager, said a transition program will be developed for plant employees to provide them with benefits, information and counseling.

"This will be a difficult time for our people," he said in a prepared statement. "Through this transition program, we hope to make the next few months as easy as possible for our employees, their families and the community."

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said he was deeply concerned about GM's decision and planned to take an active role in assisting any workers who are laid off.

"I have been in direct contact with Robert Schultz, senior group vice president of General Motors in Detroit, and with local company and union leaders to inform them that we stand ready to assist the workers and their families in getting back on their feet," Dukakis said in a prepared statement.

He said he would meet with company and union officials today "to assure the workers and their families that we will do all we can to lessen the pain and reduce the uncertainty associated with layoffs."

Walter Tremblay, a trustee of the local United Auto Workers, said most employees took the news calmly.

"If you've been with the auto industry any amount of time you believe something like this when it happens," he said. "I know what they told us, [but] what could actually happen come July of August could be subject to change between now and then."

"The newer people naturally are more concerned, which they have a right to be. You tend to worry a little more," Tremblay said. "Most of your seniority people have been through this before, so they've more or less adjusted their lives around it."

Dee Allen, a plant spokesman, said between 100 and 200 employees will remain on the payroll in Framingham after August to handle security, man the fire brigade and administer employee benefit and placement programs.

"We'll be working with people to find them jobs both within GM and even outside of General Motors," he said.

Allen also stressed that the company wanted to make the distinction between closing a plant and idling it.

"The difference is that we're going to leave the facility in a condition that it can be run" if a new product is allocated to Framingham, he said.

"If it were a closure, we would be in a position to take vital equipment out of the plant and ... otherwise dispose of the plant," he said.

Study: asthma attacks mostly result of allergies

Research shows traditional belief that two types exist is false

BOSTON (AP) — Virtually all asthma attacks are triggered by allergies, concludes a new study that challenges the widely held belief that the condition in adults usually has other causes.

Traditionally, experts have categorized asthma as having both allergic and non-allergic forms. Allergic asthma was considered to be the most common type in children and young adults, while older people were usually thought to have non-allergic asthma.

The latest work, based on tests of 2,657 people, suggests that all asthma victims have the allergic variety, regardless of their age.

"This helps us to understand better why allergic and non-allergic asthma look so much the same," said Dr. Benjamin Burrows. "It's all the same disease."

Burrows, a researcher at the University of Arizona College of Medicine, published his results in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

His team's conclusions were based largely on measurements of an antibody called immunoglobulin E, or IgE, which plays a key role in the allergic response that leads to asthma. Youngsters with asthma have high amounts of IgE, but these levels drop as people get older.

The latest study found that even though older asthmatics' IgE levels seem low when compared with children's, they are still higher than those of grownups who are free of asthma. They concluded that because of adults' relatively high IgE levels, their asthma was caused by allergies.

They noted that routine skin tests that are used to pinpoint the cause of allergies frequently fail to show anything wrong. Burrows said this is probably because the tests do not include the specific substance — called allergen — that is triggering the attacks.

"The message is pretty simple," said Burrows. "For many years, people thought there were two different kinds of asthma, only one of which was an allergy problem. Even when it's not easy to demonstrate what the allergen might be, the immunoglobulin in the blood suggests that virtually all asthma has an allergic basis."

The finding, if true, may have little effect on how doctors deal with asthma, since allergic and non-allergic asthma are usually treated with the same drugs.

Prof writes for Japanese paper

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Amid the patriotic hoopla and mudslinging of last year's presidential campaign, a University of Massachusetts professor took an unusual route to political participation.

But he didn't realize it would be in Japan.

Economics professor James Crotty, whose research in macroeconomics has been published nationwide, said he was interested when Shigenori Okazaki, the senior writer for the Japanese newspaper The Economist, invited him in November to write an article for the newspaper.

"I thought it was interesting to write about American politics and economics for a Japanese audience," he said. The article was published last month.

During the Reagan era, the wealthy benefited from substantial tax reductions, and the poor suffered under cuts in social program budgets, funding for education and aid to the homeless, Crotty said.

"The most influential sectors of our economy loved it," he said. "They benefited enormously according to everything we now know about income distribution and who won and who lost in the 1980s."

Reagan's attempts to shrink the government by cutting social and welfare expenditures backfired in the face of his astronomical military budgets, he said.

"If you look at what happened either to taxes or to where the government put its money, the government has grown," Crotty said. "The government spending is a larger proportion now of the economy than when Reagan took office."

Crotty said the government will deliberately raise the deficit in the event of a recession to provide funds to restore economic stability.

But he said raising the current $150 to $250 billion deficit may cause interest rates to skyrocket further and induce panic in domestic and foreign markets.

"That would be deficits that are out of our historical experience," Crotty said. "The recession could end up being very deep."

The United States' foreign debt, estimated at $560 billion, is also a problem because the government cannot lower interest rates since foreign investors may withdraw money from the US market.

"We now owe people all around the world, institutions, corporations, and individuals," Crotty said. "If they pull that money back from us, they're going to sell US treasury bonds and stocks and we'll have a stock market crisis."

Crotty said President Bush needs to decrease military spending and focus the nation's priorities in terms of education, the environment, and the economic infrastructure.

Aid to the homeless and government protection of the Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid programs for the elderly and poor must be increased, Crotty said.

"There's a lot of proposals to tax Social Security benefits," he said. "Social Security is the single most effective poverty fighter — more than any other program."

"We need more of the right kind of spending," Crotty said. "We need to do something."

Chancellor urges education support

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey addressed the Senate Budget Committee in Washington D.C. on Jan. 17, challenging them to develop a fiscal policy that would make the United States more competitive in the world economy.

Duffey went as a representative of the Council on Competitiveness, an national organization seeking to increase American leadership on the world stage, of which he is an executive committee member and a founding father.

The UMass chancellor was one of three people from the committee to speak citing a report compiled by the group over the last three years.

The brunt of his speech was devoted to the idea that further government investment in research and education is needed for America is to remain technologically competitive.

Duffey told senators that if US productivity were growing at the rate it did in the 1950s and 1960s, the country would be $2 trillion richer. A condition that would leave every citizen $8,000 richer, he said.

While reducing the deficit is a priority and will lead to additional investment in the private sector, growth in productivity cannot be achieved by deficit-reduction alone, Duffey said.

He told the subcommittee the nation must channel more money into the "building blocks of competitiveness — the nation's work force, our scientific and technological foundation and the public infrastructure," and proposed a three-part federal investment plan based on those building blocks.

Duffey proposed that the work force be better equipped to handle high-tech machinery, computers and robots and better understand abstract symbols rather than hand tools.

To do this, he said, the government should channel funds into the dislocated worker program, childhood nutrition, and Head Start programs because nearly a quarter of the future work force will be made up of children now living in poverty.

Duffey also recommended immediate funding increases for the National Science Foundation to double its budget in five years and asked that $5 billion in additional funding be given over the next 10 years for the university infrastructure, which has not kept pace with research needs.

Finally, the chancellor said the Council on Competitiveness recommends that trust fund money from motor fuel taxes be invested in highway development and repair and not used for deficit reduction, as is now the case. The committee is in favor of a well-functioning transportation system that would be essential for economic efficiency.

tries, and his presence will give him the further prestige which he needs so badly," said Political Science professor Gerard Braunthal.

"I think the President is showing support for Quayle that was not visible during the election," Braunthal said. "This is giving him a chance to meet some foreign leaders."

Braunthal said Quayle's visit to El Salvador is probably engineered to help save the desperate situation there as the American government continues to send money into that country. But, Braunthal added, "his presence probably won't add much to the situation."

Of the professors contacted, all felt that it was unlikely Quayle would make any major mistakes or be put into a position where it was possible for him to run afoul.

Professors also said Quayle's statements have likely already been cleared by presidential aides and would certainly not lend themselves to serious error.

According to the Globe, Quayle has been receiving briefings from aides for the past week, loading himself up with as much information as possible on the politics of the region.

Tsongas: less politics needed in state schools

NEWTON (AP) — Improving Massachusetts public colleges and universities will require less politics and more cooperation between the schools, businesses and communities to work together out of a sense of "enlightened self-interest" former Sen. Paul Tsongas said yesterday.

"What we are seeking to do is to establish a commitment and a goal that in this state, which prides itself in education, that we will have the best public higher education system in the country by the year 2000," said Tsongas, the newly appointed chairman of the Massachusetts Board of Regents.

"Now, either we want this or we don't," he said. "And I am on board on the assumption that we want it."

Tsongas, in his first extended discussion of higher education since Gov. Michael S. Dukakis made his appointment last week, outlined during a news conference what he considered as the weaknesses in the present system and a series of initiatives to correct them.

The budget cuts suffered by higher education in the past two years, and Dukakis' $735 million tax increase proposal to restore that funding and support the rest of the state budget were not part of the discussion.

"Sure, I'd like to see the kind of funding I think is required for excellence, and I don't think that's there now," he said.

"But I know instinctively that I cannot make that case until I complete this part of the mission. If I can strengthen the institutions, bring the business community in... and bring in the communities, then the funding will take care of itself," he said.

Tsongas met privately with the Massachusetts High Techonology Council before the news conference to review his proposals, specifically to develop a kind of "interlocking" relationship between colleges, business and host communities in which each sees the value of each other.

Study: pregnancy tests misread

BOSTON (AP) — Ordinary people frequently misinterpret the results of home pregnancy tests, even though they are accurate when used by trained laboratory workers, a report concludes.

The report, published as a letter in today's New England Journal of Medicine, questions whether the kits should stay on the market.

Dr. Jocelyn M. Hicks of Children's Hospital in Washington and Mariet Josefsohn of George Washington University asked secretaries, clerks, messengers and janitors to analyze 200 urine samples using two brands of home pregnancy tests. Ten percent of the results of one test and 13 percent of the results of the other were wrong.

However, when a lab technician used the test kits, one was 100 percent accurate. The other gave no false results, but the results were indeterminate in four cases.

The researchers noted that the manufacturers claim the home kits are 90 percent accurate.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Full costs of education are too high

For over a year, Governor Dukakis and officials of higher education in Massachusetts have been pursuing a plan which they hope will force middle class families to pay more college costs. As a result, tuition at the University will rise by more than 100 over the next few years and state aid will plummet.

Al Arpad

Although rhetoric in support of the plan has stressed a continued commitment to the neediest students, those students would also be hit hard if tuition were raised. Even if financial aid for the neediest increased with tuition, students from low income families would find themselves in a precarious spot — more dependent than ever on the charity of the Commonwealth, further in debt, and further differentiated from other students who can afford rising costs. There can be no credible guarantee that, once tuition goes up, charity will still be available, considering that our state budget deficit is rapidly escalating into the billions.

The full costs of a college education today are just too high, even for middle class families. A recent article in the New York Times explained how parents could spend all their savings in order to fake poverty. The new Massachusetts plan would give parents a chance to experience real poverty once they finish paying. Parents of college age children shouldn't have to choose between their children's educations and a secure retirement.

Higher Education Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer has been the most vocal proponent of tuition increases. He also favors shifting support away from public schools to assist needy students who are attending more costly private institutions.

While Chancellor Jenifer maintains that his plan will broaden the choices available to needy students. It should be obvious that most needy students, like most middle-class students, will never have the choice of attending Harvard, no matter how much financial assistance they can get. For their sake and everyone's, it is necessary to promote full and equal access to public universities by keeping tuition down.

Given the severity of the fiscal crisis in higher education, perhaps it is surprising that the state has done nothing to alter its patronizing relationship with the one group whose financial potential remains untapped — the students. Student interests and abilities have been totally eclipsed by the administration's fixation on making parents pay. The only way students can take on those responsibilities is if the system gives them more options.

Paying student employees a decent wage would be a good start toward taking the burden off both taxpayers and parents. University staff members receive relatively good wages and benefits, but students are expressly prohibited from applying for those jobs. Jobs reserved for students are menial and the pay is so miserable that many students won't even consider working on campus. Let's have some of those good jobs at good wages that the governor was talking about last fall.

Loans are another way for students to pay their own college costs but increasing their loan burdens might prevent graduates from taking underpaid jobs as nurses or teachers. A package of additional loans along with special terms for people entering critical professions could solve two problems at once.

Eventually the University will have to rely on students to pay more of their own bills. However, the reluctance to take students seriously is part of a larger pattern, from the ever stricter alcohol policies to the way administrative decisions are made while students are out of town. Even if it's too late to stop the state from abandoning full funding for higher education, students and their parents should demand serious changes in the way tuition gets paid.

Let's hope Farrakhan uses potential positively

Rev. Don Mohammed finished his discussion on the Nation of Islam and opened the floor to questions. I stood up. "Thank you for talking about the nation of Islam," I said. "Now I am better informed of the aspirtations of the nation of Islam community. However, I do have one question." I pulled out the torn page of the advertisement run in the Collegian focusing on Farrakhan's apparent anti-Semitic comments. "This is from today's Collegian, the school paper. Have you seen it?"

Rev. Mohammed shook his head in the negative.

"Well this is borrowed from the Times, where Mr. Farrakhan is quoted as having said that 'Judaism is a gutter religion,' which he later denied. Mr. Farrakhan is also quoted as having said that, "Jews continue to use the name of God to shield [Judaism] under his holy and righteous name." I would like you to explain these comments if you could, because as a Jew I am concerned.

Rev. Mohammed proceeded to voiciferously deny the quotes and called them "dirty lies." He continued on to say Mr. Farrakhan has continually been quoted out of context; and in some cases, been falsely quoted. I am glad that the Rev. Mohammed believes that Mr. Farrakhan was quoted out of context. If he had said that the quotes were correct as printed it would have been quite scary. If he wasn't, that would be very unfortunate, and it threatens the survival of already shaky black-Jewish relations. If they are correct, Farrakhan still has a chance to make a strong political move.

If he had not denied the comments but accepted them and then denounced them, saying they were spoken in anger, then he could have opened the Nation of Islam to embrace the Jewish community. Many angry words have been said, and much pride has been wounded, yet there is till time for a peaceful future. Let history be made at the University of Massachusetts.

Putting aside Mr. Farrakhan's possible anti-Semitic comments, I believe in many of the ideas portrayed by Rev. Mohammed about the Nation of Islam. I believe in ending drugs, stopping racism, and giving all minorities a chance at a better life. These are all admirable goals. However, racial tension I do not believe in. The goals are definitely worth reaching for, but Mr. Farrakhan will not achieve them without stopping the friction between the two religions first. I only hope he can.

Attendance to Farrakhan is a show of support

In the four months since Louis Farrakhan's name began buzzing around campus, the many issues and questions stalking his scheduled appearance at the University of Massachusetts tonight have boiled themselves down to a precious few. One, to be exact. To Farrakhan supporters, Black empowerment at UMass is now the cause of choice, no matter how that affects any minority groups on campus whom Farrakhan's message offends. The issue surrounding his appearance is simple and sharp: power.

Alison Buckholtz

This is not just a Black-Jewish issue. Farrakhan is widely recognized as anti-White and anti-Asian in addition to anti-Semetic. The Black community, furthermore, is as divided over Farrakhan as every other group. At UMass, this has evolved into a conflict between many Blacks and many Jews. Although they have historically worked together to combat injustice, demogogues like Farrakhan, with a divide-and-conquer mentality, often pit minority groups against each other. They appeal to the disenfranchised. They promise empowerment. They find a scapegoat. In Farrakhan's case, the scapegoat is the Jew, the Asian, and the White man.

How can anti-anything be permitted for the "greater good" of Black empowerment? How can one group elevate itself by stomping on others? Yes, Farrakhan also preaches Black economic initiative and a drug-free society. However, a cornerstone of his message is that it's the Jews who got us in all this trouble in the first place. That side of the message is often toned down for college audiences and may be too subtle to catch tonight. But it is there, it is always there, and it will surface again soon.

Jesse Jackson wasn't afraid to find Farrakhan's statements "reprehensible and morally indefensible." The NAACP and National Urban League also condemn Farrakhan. Andrew Young, as well, admitted that Farrakhan's anti-Zionist stance was a form of political anit-Semitism. Chancellor Duffey issued his statement of non-support last month. Still, many key departments on campus and most students remain silent today.

Keeping quiet condones Farrakhan's message. And attending his speech, no matter what the intent, lends him your support. Whether you buy a ticket out of mere curiosity or to educate yourself, the result is the same. Other options are available — discussion panels and information sessions sponsored by the Office of Human Relations, and videotapes of Farrakhan speeches are two obvious examples. The Vigil for Diversity and Human Dignity tonight, marching from the Campus Center Auditorium to the Fine Arts Center at 6:30 is another. The question of whether or not to support Farrakhan with your attendance is ultimately a question of whether or not to be an ally, because he will be here for three hours and leave us to clean up the mess. He is not worth it. He is not worth the fighting.

Farrakhan preaches hope

I had the pleasure of hearing the "controversial" Minister Farrakhan when he last spoke in Boston. I can honestly say that I heard no statements that I perceived or felt anyone else would perceive as anti-Semitic, nor did I get the impression that I was being taught to hate anybody. In fact, he constantly reinforced the fact that he does not advocate violence or hatred toward anyone or any particular race.

To those of you who do not know this, first and foremost, Louis Farrakhan is a minister, who preaches the word of God. Therefore, if he was to advocate hatred or violence, he would be going against the will of God! What he does is speak out on any unjust practices on Afro-American people.

To those members of the community who believe or perceive that a rift between black and Jewish students is developing because of his visit, I see this possibly happening because of the constant slandering of him by some members of the Jewish community, and other misinformed individuals. You must understand that Minister Farrakhan is a leader and inspiration to many Afro-Americans, and if you constantly slander a group's leader, members of that group are going to be hurt and upset. If Minister Farrakhan did preach hatred against Jews, (or anybody for that matter) I would honestly support your concerns. However, I found that not to be the case when I heard him speak.

So I say to the UMass community, "Don't say you understand the man, until you hear the man."

BOG designs info pamphlet

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

By Friday, the Board of Governors hopes to reap the fruit of intersession labor when they distribute a new pamphlet designed to explain the Campus Center's resources to the community.

The pamphlet, being printed at Wickles in Amherst this week to be distributed across the campus, is the board's way to combat the disappearing links between the University population and the activities occurring in the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

Board Chairman Eric Nakajima said the pamphlet will explain the resources and how to go about using them. A good portion of the campus is unaware of what the building has to offer, Nakajima said.

Nakajima said his goal is to make the complex fully accessible to the students, faculty and visitors who frequent it. But he said the pamphlet is only the beginning of a far reaching plan proposed by the board to promote the University of Massachusetts as a place where things happen.

"We try to make a point of the University being diverse, but the point gets lost if measures are not taken to publicize the events that take place here," Nakajima said.

Nakajima said he is trying to facilitate communication between organizations on campus, hence clearing a way for combined efforts between groups to accomplish tasks more efficiently.

One of the next measures the board will take is to install a display case on the third floor of the Campus Center which will house advertisements and announcements posted by campus organizations. The case will act as a bulletin board where students can tell at a glance upcoming activities.

Blood drive

the spread of syphilis, hepatitis, malaria and the AIDS virus.

The prospective donor begins the process by reading the pamphlet "What You Must Know Before Giving Blood" and completing a personal medical history questionnaire. A Red Cross worker then checks pulse, temperature, blood pressure and tests the donor's blood for a red cell count.

While waiting for a bed, the prospective donor is given one last chance to indicate confidentially whether his or her blood should be discarded after donation.

Blood is always drawn with a sterile needle, which is then thrown away, according to the Red Cross pamphlet.

Nine registered nurses, 10 volunteer assistants and two unit assistants are working at the drive. At 1 p.m. yesterday, there were 30 people donating or hoping to donate in Campus Center room 163.

Thirty-time donor Brian Cole said he was visiting the University from his Connecticut home when he saw the blood drive. Cole said donating blood is "relaxing" and volunteers at the University drive, unlike those at other drives he had attended, gave accurate estimations of donation times. Ezzo, who has donated five times, agreed, saying that if a volunteer estimates the process will take 45 minutes, it usually does.

"It takes some time," he said. "If you're in a hurry, you just don't do it."

For those who are not able to donate today, Marion said, there will be two more drives on Feb. 7 and 28. This week's drive was sponsored by University Women, an organization of women faculty and faculty wives.

Regular donors will recognize Mary Andrews, a University Women member who has been a volunteer at University blood drives for more than 10 years. She described this drive as "very successful so far, but they can use everybody."

ARTS & LIVING

Getting hip to the sound of the London Underground

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Hi there all you intravenous music users and abusers. It's Disc Junkie here, fresh from some cold chillin' in the fair city of Winnipeg, Manitoba where the only thing that's warm is the beer, no doubt because the place is packed to the gunnels with Brit emigrees such as myself. Anyway even during the holidays old DJ is still on the job. There simply is no rest for the addicted, and as you're probably aware by now, mere alcohol doesn't thrill me at all. No friends, what I need is Acieed, more specifically Acid Jazz, the hottest sound yet to emerge from the vast melting pot of clubland, and Acid Jazz and other Illicit Grooves (Cooltempo imp.) smokes like nothing else, except maybe Yellowstone National Park.

It's not what you think. To call it jazz-funk is to call the Sistine Chapel a church. Although its roots lie in the rare groove of Maceo Parker and Byron Morris, Acid Jazz takes everything from Mayfield's Superfly funk to Washington Go-go, from latin bop to Elmer Bernstein's Twilight Zone theme, and cooks the lot in a very hot oven for about 40 minutes.

Sample if you will the wonderful cheese-jazz of Acid Jazz Alliance's "Shaft in Action," renamed "Shaft in Acton" for local color, or Galliano and his Jazz Renegades launching into a violent tale of "ghetto attrition" against a backdrop of scintillating sax on "Six Sharp Fists." It's all guaranteed to make the purists puke, but who cares? they can't dance anyway. All I know is that Acid Jazz and Other Illicit Grooves is in danger of becoming an integral part of my turntable. Volume 2, where are you? I approve this groove.

Elsewhere on the sonic spectrum it's rub-a-dub-dub with Adrian Sherwood and chums from the excellent On-U Sound record label, on the just released Pay it All Back Vol 2 (On-U Sound imp.) a compilation which includes material from the sizeable On-U back catalogue, along with some new stuff from their current roster. Of the former, Lee "scratch" Perry and the Dub Syndicate's "Night Train to Doomsville" is a standout. As far as the new boys go, I particularly liked Barmy Army's "Billy Bonds" which uses the radio commentaries of the legendary Peter Jones (well, he's a legend in my neck of the woods anyway!) to pay tribute to one of the most popular and enduring English soccer players of the last decade, and the weird, mesmeric "Circular Motion" by the Forehead Brothers, a new project from that omni-present ghost-in-the-machine, Keith Leblanc.

Surprisingly there's nothing here from Leblanc and Sherwood's more familiar outfit, Tackhead, though I suspect that they will turn up on the CD which, we are promised, has loads of extra tracks. Anyway, there's plenty else on Pay it All Back Vol 2 to prick up your ears. Mutant noise par excellence.

Next week I'll be taking a look at the new platter from Manchester's finest, New Order, plus Todd Terry, currently dominating the dancefloor with To the Batmobile Let's Go!

Dance theatre group opens arts festival

The American Indian Dance Theatre will perform at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Saturday, Feb. 4 at 8 p.m., the first event of the Center's spring season. The performance will also mark the opening of Arts America '89, a seven-event mini-festival celebrating the American performing arts.

The American Indian Dance Theatre was formed in the spring of 1987 and is the nation's first professional dance company of American Indian dancers and musicians. The performers represent many different tribes and regions, including Apache, Cherokee, Chippewa, Comanche and Zuni. All the dances in the production are traditional and are accompanied by live music - various kinds of drums, bells, rattles and the wooden flute. The production is directed and staged by Hanay Geiogamah and Raoul Trujillo, both native Americans who have brought their personal experience as Indians together with solid professional backgrounds in theatre nand dance. During the evening, the audience will see many different styles of dance including dances of the earth, happy, social dances, dances to summon spirits and dances of great skill and solo expression.

The American Indian Dance Theatre is being co-presented by the Fine Arts Center Concert Series and the New World Theater. Tickets are available at the FAC Box Office priced $22, $20 and $18. There is also a special price of $5 for children aged 12 and under.

Allan Wexler exhibits his bizarre collection of furniture "for the typical house" at the University Gallery, UMass. The exhibition begins Feb. 4 and runs until March 16, but if you're looking for a few cheap items for the house, you may be disappointed.

Reed returns to VU form on hard-hitting New York

By ARI VAIS
Collegian Staff

Remember those civil rights workers buried under ground: If I ran for president, and once was a member of the Klan, wouldn't you call me on it, the way I call you on Farrakhan?

— Lou Reed

Another semester. Another morning. Same routine - I get up, get dressed, and on the way out, grab my Walkman, loaded with a brand new Lou Reed tape, New York.

Clearly a concept album, as he inscribes on the inside cover, " . . . it's meant to be listened to in one 58 minute sitting as though it were a book or a movie."

"Romeo Had Juliette", the album's opener, catches me off guard. It's crunchy, upbeat, and all the instruments are real. No synths, no electric drums - nothing like this since Street Hassle, which is quite old. It's funny - vintage Lou Reed.

By the time my bus reaches campus, the first side is over. I'm impressed. There's the familiar hard rockers and several crystalline ballads ("Halloween Parade", "Last Great American Whale") a la "Pale Blue Eyes". There's even a silly, half-baked fusion piece in which Reed expresses his excitement for the child his wife is currently pregnant with. The highlight so far, however, is not the music as much as the lyrics. After having experimented with almost every style and cliche, Reed gets back to his roots with the Velvet Underground, and what roots they were! The lyrics on New York are raw, shocking, often times ugly and demented. The only difference is, it isn't all negative: only a realistic look at life in New York City. In his trademark monotone, Reed addresses AIDS, poverty, child abuse, crack, over-indulgence and blind patriotism, often referring to the Statue of "Bigotry".

Once on the UMASS campus, and with the album's second side playing in my head, I sense strange and hostile vibrations around me . . . Louis Farrakhan is speaking here tonight. It hasn't even quite hit me yet, the absurdity of it all. My school is paying nine grand to have a man who hates me because of my religion come speak. It's sort of perverse. It's sort of like having my school tell me and every other Jew that goes here to take a hike. Just out of morbid curiosity, I may actually go hear him speak. But I doubt it.

It's going to be an ugly night.

So far, the second side is like the first - tight, funny and lyrically excellent. One can see on this album, more than any other, just what an amazing street poet Reed is. Also this time around, he's put together an all-star band: Mike Rathke, Rob Wasserman, Fred Mahler, and on several songs, VU's Mo Tucker on drums. My thoughts drift back to tonight's speaker, when the song "Good Evening Mr. Waldheim" begins to play. Right away, Reed is rapping cynically about Jesse Jackson's Common Ground speech, the PLO, Waldheim himself and of course, Farrakhan.

It's reassuring to have this member of the Jewish community offer his outrage at the Leader of the Nation of Islam's public racism.

As I reach the Campus Center, the tape ends with a haunting tribute to the late Andy Warhol, Reed's one time mentor. So ends this deranged salute to New York City. Reed certainly expresses himself in no uncertain terms, leaving behind unforgettable images. It is nice to see that the grandfather of punk has grown up, stabilized at what he does best, but has remained very much on the edged, and controversial.

The posters are everywhere. I will no, no doubt, pay money to see one Louis - Louis Reed, in Boston. No controversy, no KKK rallies, just a performance from a rock pioneer who is still honest enough to address today's frightening realities.

STAND UP FOR SOLIDARITY IN THE COMMON STRUGGLE FOR HUMAN DIGNITY

On Thursday, February 2, the UMASS campus stands in danger of being torn apart and polarized: Blacks and Whites; Muslims, Jews and Christians.

Join us in a Candlelight Vigil for Diversity and Human Dignity on Thursday, February 2. We will gather in the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:30 p.m. and walk as a group to stand quietly and peacefully outside the Fine Arts Center. (The vigil will be completed before the beginning of the Farrakhan talk in the FAC and the Jewish Arts Festival performance in Bowker Auditorium.)

Inside the Fine Arts Center, Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam, will be holding forth. His words are well-documented. Speaking about the "narrow-minded common Jew," he said: "I will grind them and crush them to bits." (New York Post May 23, 1988.)About Christians: they "preach love but practice hate and tyranny, use God to cover up their corrupt and dirty practices."(Northeastern University, April 20, 1985.)

Outside the Fine Arts Center, Mordecai Levy, head of the militant Jewish Defense Organization, will be holding forth. His words are well documented. Levy, who follows Farrakhan from campus to campus, has said elsewhere: "Within 90 days Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam will be wiped out." (San Diego State University), and "we called Farrakhan's people...and said we'd be very happy he came because we'd break both his legs." (State University of Albany)

Farrakhan and Levy specialize in building barriers between people. They polarize, they divide, they sow fear for their own ends. They try to build their followers' strength on the false foundation of fear and hatred, which serves only to divide and weaken what could be a common struggle for human rights, dignity, and equality. The extremism of one nurtures the extremism of the other. If we are silent, they can set in motion a vicious cycle that can tear this campus apart, pitting one group against the other.

We must not let bigotry and extremism take over UMASS.

LET US SHOW THAT THE HANDS THAT LINKED ONE END OF THE CAMPUS TO THE OTHER ON OCTOBER 27 WILL NOT BE BROKEN APART ON FEBRUARY 2!

WE REJECT ANTI-SEMITISM AND RACISM, EXTREMISM AND SCAPEGOATING, VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. when he said:
"It is not only that anti-Semitism is immoral, though that alone is enough. It is used to divide Negro and Jew who have effectively collaborated in the struggle for justice. It injures Negroes because it upholds the doctrine of racism which they have the greatest stake in destroying."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of the Rev. Jesse Jackson when he said:
"I find [Farrakhan's statements regarding the Jews] to be reprehensible and morally indefensible...I discourage his participation. Neither anti-Semitism or anti-Black statements have any place in this party."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of Pastor Niemoller, a Protestant minister imprisoned by the Third Reich, when he said:
"In Germany they first came for the communists; I did not speak because I was not communist. Then they came for the Jews; I did not speak because I was not a Jew. Then they came to fetch the workers, members of trade unions; I did not speak because I was not a trade unionist. Afterward, they came for the Catholics; I did not say anything because I was a Protestant. Eventually they came for me, and there was no one left to speak."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of Imam Wallace Deen Muhammad when he said:
"What Farrakhan teaches is not at all what we believe in. Islam believes that Jews, Christians and Muslims share an affinity, we believe in one and the same God, we represent one humanity."

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of Rabbi Albert Vorspan when he said:
"It is in the deepest of self-interest for us as Jews and for the American people to create a society which cherishes diversity and which builds unity in diversity,"

COME TOGETHER in the spirit of the ancient rabbis of the Mishnah when they taught:
Why was the first human created as a single individual? For the sake of peace and harmony, so that no one might say to another: "My ancestor was better than yours." We are all descended from one common ancestor.

Come together in the struggle against racism and anti-Semitism. Let us unite in the common effort to build a better society for all.

Kline does less than shine in Shanley's January Man fiasco

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

I must say I was kind of looking forward to seeing The January Man. I mean with a cast that includes the eminently watchable Kevin Kline, Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, Oscar nominated for Scorsese's Color of Money and Harvey Keitel, and a script by John Patrick Shanley who picked up an Oscar last year for his delightful comedy of Italian manners and mores, Moonstruck, how can you possibly go wrong?

In every possible way would seem to be the answer. One can only assume that success has travelled rather rapidly to Mr. Shanley's head by way of replacement for his brain, and that the distinguished cast has gone along with this ridiculous enterprise, based on the writer's reputation proving if nothing else that you're only as good as your next movie.

The January Man is the kind of film that cobbles itself together as it goes along, and just because it's cheerful and good-natured it expects you to be the same. Kline plays Nick Starkey, an ex-cop turned fireman who is called back to the force to solve a bizarre serial murder case, and more importantly to save the reputations of both the Mayor (a ludicrously over the top Rod Steiger) and the police commissioner (Keitel) who is actually Starkey's brother, and who we discover, was responsible for having him kicked off the force all those years ago.

Starkey is a beatnik, but he's also a genius and a brilliant cordon bleu chef to boot, and while he may not be able to bring the crazed psycho out into the open with his fried octopus, we know he's going to get his man, which he does through a series of brilliant insights or utterly contrived plot devices depending on how hooked and/or mentally retarded is the viewer. And of course somewhere along the way he falls for the mayor's daughter (Mastrantonio) and foul of a tough police captain (Danny Aelio, dragging up every cop cliche in the book).

Clumsily directed by Pat (Stars & Bars) O'Connor, The January Man is so leaden it could conceivably damage your health. About the only thing you can say for the movie is that it is aptly titled. With any luck this left over slice of Christmas turkey will have vanished into oblivion by the end of the month.

THE RADIATORS swing in to the Student Union Ballroom on Friday, Feb. 10, with their special brand of "Fishhead Music," a mix of Cajun, calypso and bluegrass with a heavy dash of funk. Catch 'em if you can. Show begins 8 p.m.

Born romantic, Yohah Ralph exhibits her paintings in Northampton this week.

Wexler furnishes University Gallery with his unique art

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

There's just no way to escape from art over the next few days. You can run, you can barricade yourself in your room, and you can even arm yourself. It won't matter, though. No matter what you do, you'll be forced to endure the artwork of no less than three separate artists.

There's just no way out. Two University exhibitions open this week, and another will open in Northampton next Friday.

If you succumb, though, you'll soon find yourself drinking cappucino with the best of them while you lean over your tweed-jacketed arm and use expresions like "tonal value," and "dynamic statement." It just might be a good idea; then you can have a much easier time getting your Master's degree. The admissions board eats up expressions like that.

Just remember, you heard it here first.

Anyway, the first the first exhibition is in the University Gallery, and it's a show devoted to some really cool furniture. That's right, furniture. Dining Room and Furniture for the Typical House, an installation of recent work by artist/architect Allan Wexler, will open on February 4th, and go away on March 17th. The press release makes this sound like an exhibition that you should be extremely baked for. Wexler is an artist concerned with how much people can affect their living space, and the highlight of the show is three separate structures that can be opened, slid, and turned inside out.

In other words: in addition to the over one hundred models for building proposals that will be at this show, well...imagine if someone replaced all of your furniture with Lego blocks and Rubik's Snakes. Or something.

Also opening the same day at the same place (and ending the same day) is Naum Gabo Monoprints. The release says Gabo and his brother proposed 'the Constructivist theory of art (if you run out of words to use while sipping your cappucino, use this one)." Apparently this term has something to do with 'the structure of the universe and the time/space continuum (press release again)." I don't know what this means.

Finally, APE Ltd, a gallery in Thornes Market (150 Main Street in Northampton) will feature A Never Ending Romance, an exhibition devoted to the painitings of Yohah Ralph. "The work is inspired by the artist's never ending fascination with women..." Sounds extremely original.

As for me, I'm gonna rent some videos.

LAST YEAR 500 STUDENTS DID RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ON THEIR CAREERS... DID YOU?

"My co-op last summer gave me practical hands-on experience. I learned how to set and meet realistic goals, and use effective communication skills while earning more than $5,000!."

"Working in a professional environment has provided me with exposure to management skills that are invaluable to my career goals."

"It's been great working as part of a big company and seeing how it operates. For comparison, I'm looking forward to doing another co-op at a smaller business."

UMass provides service for military students

By ANTHONY PADOVANO
Collegian Staff

Students who serve in the military sometimes have different needs than civilian students, and the University of Massachusetts Veteran's Assistance & Counseling Service exists to address those needs, according to the program's director.

VACS Director Arthur Hilson, who is also executive director of Public Safety, said the program is important because it provides veteran students with someone to facilitate their needs — "not only [to process paperwork] but to also serve as an advocate."

Hilson, a 20-year Navy veteran who served in both the Korean and Vietnam Wars, said "as long as there are veterans who are pursuing a degree with the help of an outside agency [such as the Veterans Administration]," then VACS is needed.

Hilson said there are problems VACS can handle that others might not. One example he gave was if a veteran student can not pay a bill to the Registrar's or Bursar's on time, VACS might be a helpful advocate since "the Bursar's and the Registrar's are not trained to deal with that type of problem."

Some services VACS provides for the approximately 1,000 University veterans include counseling, referrals, housing placement, outreach, recruitment and entitlement processing. Hilson said though the program focuses on UMass students, any veteran may use the service.

Karen Truehart, a certification clerk at VACS, said she helps veterans receive the "maximum" benefits for which they are entitled. She said her job requires her to be aware of all regulations so she can properly advise students.

Truehart's job consists mainly of trying to work out problems between the veteran student and the VA or the Department of Defense.

Over the years, the focus of the VACS program has changed as the makeup of the veteran has changed. Today the emphasis has switched from counseling, which was common with the Vietnam veteran, to entitlement processing.

Only two teenagers are now living at the home, and two others are in the process of being interviewed for acceptance. Any single woman who has decided to carry her baby to term can apply, Johnson said. Women ages 15 to 26 have stayed at the home so far, she added.

Applicants must fill out a 10-page form, and sign a contract that holds them to obeying 20 house rules. "Getting in here is not a piece of cake," Johnson said, "and we have turned away a couple of girls that we didn't think would be happy here. We have been really lucky, though. We've had five good girls."

Residents at the home are not allowed to drink alcohol, smoke, or take drugs, Johnson said. In addition, the women are required to work, volunteer, or continue their education. "They can't just be sitting around watching TV," she said.

Sarah volunteers at a day-care center 10 hours a week. "I do it to get used to screaming kids," the Belchertown High School graduate joked.

Residents are counseled on whether to give the baby up for adoption, finances, and "just checking on whether or not we are OK," Sarah said.

The required weekly counseling is provided by four agencies: Childrens' Aid and Family Services in Northampton, Brightside in Springfield, Bethany Christian Services in Wakefield, and Jewish Family Services in Springfield.

"For any girl who's pregnant, whether she's going to keep the baby or give it up for adoption, this is a good place to stay, to come and make a decision," she said. "It gives you a lot of thinking time."

the town to halt the research.

Christobal Bonifaz, an Amherst lawyer supporting the AFSC, told the board, "you are the body in this town that has the power to ban it."

Board member Diana Stein said the board should deal with health concerns, but that the AFSC should take their objections to military research before Town Meeting.

"It was Town Meeting that made Amherst an early nuclear-free zone," she said. "It's also a more appropriate body."

The public hearing is scheduled to last two hours, with one-half hour each for the university and opponents of the research to speak, and one hour for the citizens of Amherst.

Suspect in bus fiasco shot dead by police

BOSTON (AP) — Officials were investigating yesterday the fatal shooting of a Boston man who commandeered an empty Greyhound bus and smashed his way through several of this city's downtown sections before a hail of police gunfire halted him.

Donald E. Johnson, 19, was rushed to Boston City Hospital, where he died at about 11:10 p.m., hospital spokesman Mark Douville said.

Hospital officials initially reported Johnson died of multiple gunshot wounds to the chest, but a state medical examiner yesterday said the victim was killed by a single bullet.

Johnson's deadly journey apparently started about 50 miles south of Boston in Providence, R.I., where he is believed to have stolen the bus worth about $200,000 from a maintenance yard, said Liz Hale, a spokeswoman for the Dallas-based Greyhound Inc.

Two Metropolitan police officers spotted the bus at about 10:25 p.m. near an interstate exit into the city's Chinatown section.

Boston Police spokesman Jim Jordan said the officers tailed the bus at speeds not exceeding 40 mph for about 10 minutes before it plowed into a car parked along a major thoroughfare and then continued on its way.

As many as 40 additional Metropolitan and Boston police officers subsequently joined the pursuit, which continued at speeds of no more than 40 mph, Metropolitan Police officer Jack Mahoney said.

The pursuit climaxed when the bus stopped on a dead-end street and two police officers got out of their cruiser to approach the bus from both sides.

Jordan said the officers were briefly unable to see Johnson before he remounted the driver's seat and backed the 35-ton bus into four police cars.

Johnson proceeded to back into several more cars, smashed into a fire alarm signal, utility pole and house before officers opened fire, Jordan said.

Officials both at local police departments and the district attorney's office said yesterday circumstances surrounding the incident were unclear, but that an investigation was under way.

Officials said neither officers nor passers-by sustained injuries in the incident, which left 13 cars, including four police cruisers, damaged or destroyed. Damage estimates to the bus were pending, Greyhound officials said.

North Adams library burdened

NORTH ADAMS (AP)— For the third straight year the Internal Revenue Service has deluged city librarians looking for a few income tax forms to hand out to residents with crates holding thousands of forms they don't need, don't want and can't use.

"The Bible says 'Ask and you shall receive.' But this is ridiculous and from the IRS of all things," Library Director Lisa Jarisch said Wednesday as another carton of tax forms arrived at the door of the Victorian home housing the library, which already has cartons containing about 10,000 esoteric supplemental schedules.

Jarisch said she found about 100 of the 1040 forms she had sought in the box. She had originally requested about 1,000 each of the most commonly used forms, plus instruction booklets.

"It was just a quirk," said Robert Ruttenberg, a spokesman for the regional IRS office in Boston, suggesting a problem with the person taking the telephone order hearing something other than what was said might have been responsible at least for the library's previous problems.

Dukakis vows to expand waste cleanup

MEDFORD (AP) — Massachusetts will expand its efforts to clean up hazardous waste sites and prevent future pollution from occurring, Gov. Michael Dukakis pledged yesterday at an abandoned rustproofing company.

The Massachusetts Superfund program has allowed the state to clean up more than 260 toxic waste sites in recent years, Dukakis said. But more resources are needed now to implement the voters' decision on a 1986 ballot question to clean more sites and do it faster, he said.

"We've got to continue this kind of investment," said Dukakis, a late convert to the hazardous waste ballot question. "We want to expand and speed up the state cleanup program. It isn't good enough to tell the people of Medford that the state can't afford to hire any more workers and they have to wait their turn for a cleanup."

Dukakis was joined by his new Environmental Affairs secretary, John DeVillars, at the former Rustproofing and Metal Finishing Co., which is rated as a "priority 1" waste site by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

The company, which is now in trusteeship, once stored hundreds of barrels of cyanide, acid and other toxic materials on the site, about a quarter mile from a residential neighborhood. At a cost of $500,000 to the state, the containers of toxics have been removed.

But some of the soil remains blue and officials consider the area unsafe. There is no precise timetable for final cleanup due to a lack of funds, officials said.

The governor's proposed state budge for fiscal 1990 includes $18.8 million in new funds to enable DEQE to hire 142 more workers to address priority sites. In addition, $80 million of the $604 million in higher annual taxes that Dukakis is seeking would be set aside for environmental programs.

"To get the cleanup job done, it takes resources," DeVillars said. "I'm proud to stand here today with Governor Dukakis because he has the guts to ask for the $18 million it will take to move ahead on this kind of work."

Dukakis and DeVillars also repeated their determination to make polluters pay the state's cost of overseeing toxic site cleanups, an issue that has touched off a storm of protest from industry.

Dukakis said parties responsible for toxic pollution — who now must pay the cleanup cost — should also be made to pay as close to 100 percent as possible of the administrative cost.

Mavroules named subcommitte chair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Nicholas Mavroules, who lost a bid for the chairmanship of the House Armed Services Committee two years ago, was named yesterday to head the panel's investigations subcommittee.

The sixth-term Democrat from Peabody, who moves over from the readiness subcommittee, said he will use the new post to look at military purchasing reforms in the wake of the pentagon procurement scandal.

Mavroules was unavailable for comment yesterday because he was out of the office, according to spokesman Richard Gregory. In a prepared statement, the congressman sounded a get-tough message for the military-industrial complex.

"Let the Pentagon and the industry be on notice, we intend to see that the procurement process meets the highest standards," Mavroules said.

The congressman said six government commissions have proposed "strikingly similar" procurement reforms over the past four decades, but that the Defense Department has failed to adequately install those reforms. He promised to work closely with the Bush administration.

Mavroules also said the investigations subcommittee will look at the military's performance in drug interdiction.

In addition, the new chairman said he plans to look at the impact of US defense companies being bought by foreign firms.

"Not only does this drain much needed [research and development] work out of the United States, but it also increases the likelihood that sensitive national security information will be compromised," he said.

The change in command at the investigations subcommittee is striking. Rep. Bill Nichols, D-Ala., had been chairman up until his death in December. A conservative Southerner who came to Washington as a key ally of George Wallace, Nichols supported Reagan administration programs such as the Strategic Defense Initiative and the MX missile program while opposing the proposed nuclear arms freeze.

School children becoming part of drug trade

NEW YORK (AP) — As the crack problem grows ever larger, its victims have become ever younger. The latest two — an 11-year- old alleged to be a drug courier and a 10-year-old crack dealer — left officials wondering if they're losing the drug fight.

"Crack and drugs are so pervasive that of course it trickles down into the lower grades," said Paul Berozeller, a spokesman for the United Federation of Teachers. "You have young kids used every day as a drug runner."

Ginay Marks, a Brooklyn school board activist for 17 years, agreed: "I would say in terms of crack — and we thought heroin was an epidemic — nothing has spread with such rapidity among our school children."

The two grade-schoolers arrested in separate incidents less than three weeks apart offered examples of both street and school incidents, authorities said.

The 10-year-old was arrested Jan. 15 after police watched him and a 14-year-old partner make a half-dozen crack sales in Wyandanch, Long Island. The 5-foot-tall boy had three $20 vials of crack and $226 cash on him when arrested.

A Family Court judge ruled Wednesday that he had committed the crimes and scheduled sentencing for Feb. 10. The boy faces up to 18 months' detention in a youth facility or two years' probation. Charges against the 14-year-old were pending.

On Tuesday, an 11-year-old arrived at his Bronx elementary school carrying what looked like his lunch bag. Inside, school officials found 411 vials of crack, most in 10-packs worth $50 a piece.

The special education student told police his 17-year-old brother had given him the drugs. A search was on yesterday for the brother, said police spokesman Officer Hugh Barry.

The 11-year-old faced a Family court hearing late Wednesday afternoon.

"When an 11-year-old child with special learning needs is exploited as a drug carrier, it reaffirms my belief that drugs are the most serious problem our youth must confront," said Schools Chancellor Richard Green.

Local School Board President Lawrence A. Warden, whose Bronx district includes the school that the 11-year-old attended, said he was "shocked and angry" after the arrest.

"We don't expect that from an 11-year-old youngster. It's like carrying a loaded machine gun in a playground," said Warden.

Judge rules marine guilty of negligence

CAMP LEJEUN, N.C. (AP) — A military judge yesterday convicted a Marine platoon sergeant of negligence in the death of a soldier who had been left behind in the Mojave Desert during a training exercise in August.

The judge, Maj. Kent Smith, ruled that Sgt. Christopher Clyde failed to properly account for the whereabouts and welfare of his Marines.

Clyde was the platoon sergeant of Lance Cpl. Jason Rother, 19, of Minneapolis, Minn., who was left behind during a night exercise Aug. 30 after being posted as a road guide in the California desert. His remains were found in December.

The sergeant was found innocent of willful disobedience. He had been accused of failing to obey orders in granting leave to Rother's squad leader after the exercise, resulting in a delay in realizing Rother had been left behind.

Clyde had maintained he did nothing wrong and that he only relied on the instructions of his superiors. "If he's guilty of anything, he's guilty of relying on other people," defense attorney William Fisher said in closing arguments.

Prosecutor Robert Nunally had argued, "He screwed up and he screwed up in a major way."

Sue Gorski and the Minutewomen swam past the University of Rhode Island this past weekend.

■ swimming

"There were a few surprises, like Kim Morin in the 50 free and Jodi Schwartz in the 200 fly," Newcomb said.

"Also, Theresa Jacobs in the 100 (56.06, just missing first by .04) and Tonia Stafford is starting to swim well."

In all, Newcomb was happy with the performance, and glad to get back on the winning side.

"Generally it was another good meet," he said. "Most of the swimmers are happy intersession is over. It was the most productive intersession we've ever had. Everything went better than we could have planned."

■ gymnastics

The strength of the Minutemen according to Johnson is the high bar where Johnson feels his team is as strong as any team in the east. But UMass did not execute quite as well on the bar last Saturday as they have earlier in the season.

With the exception of Eggers, senior Tim Myers (8.5) was the only Minuteman to break eight. Myers also finished fourth in the all around competition, compiling a 51.05. ESU's Carlos Silva finished third with a 51.35.

Despite the loss of Booker, and the mental letdown, UMass was still able to take control of this meet in the first event, the floor exercise, and carry the lead right to the high bar which was the last event.

Minutewomen ready for Rhode Island

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

For a team that has been struggling of late, this could be the turning point.

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team returns home to the Curry Hicks Cage tonight (7:30) to face the University of Rhode Island. A lot will be at stake for the Minutewomen, who have been sliding since the beginning of the new year and are looking to regain themselves.

Tonight's game may present itself as the perfect opportunity.

For starters, the WRams are even more in a rut than the Minutewomen. Plodding along at just 3-14 this year, including 1-7 in the Atlantic 10 conference, Rhode Island is clearly not having the best of seasons.

The team's only conference victory came against St. Bonaventure in Olean, NY on Jan. 12. They have lost non-conference games against Holy Cross, Boston University and New Hampshire, all teams that the Minutewomen beat earlier in the season.

And to make matters worse, the team's leading scorer, 5-foot-11 junior forward Diane Boshart, has been suspended for the remainder of the season for what has been termed "team disciplinary reasons."

This has become a concern for UMass coach Kathy Hewelt. Although the Minutewomen have already picked up a win over the WRams this year (68-58 on Jan. 3 in Kingston, RI), Hewelt feels that the loss of Boshart will have a direct effect on the way the WRams play this game.

"Sometimes when you lose a player, you can either give up, or you can pull together and play better as a team," Hewelt said. "It's a little like Maine (who beat the Minutewomen earlier this year after having several players and assistant coaches leave the team). We have to be prepared for the team that comes to play."

UMass has been playing well of late, despite the fact that it has dropped its last four games to fall under .500 (8-9) after starting the year with five straight wins. UMass dropped a close game to a tough West Virginia team at the Cage, and then hit the road for three straight, among which were a loss to non-league rival Dartmouth and setbacks to conference elite Rutgers and St. Joseph's.

Hewelt has been encouraged by the play of the team and the way they have kept their heads up through the losses, and feels that they can turn the tables for once against URI.

In the earlier meeting between the two, UMass came off a pair of losses in the Bath Ironworks Classic in Portland, ME and started off 1989 on the right foot, picking up a win in its first conference game of the season. UMass blew out to a 42-30 lead at the half and held off the hosts down the stretch, restricting the WRams to just 34 percent efficiency from the floor.

Leading the way for the Minutewomen was sophomore forward Keyburn McCusker, who nailed nine of her 10 shots on the floor and picked up a game-high 20 points. Junior center Helen Freeman added to the inside dominance for UMass with 18 points and a game-high 15 rebounds.

"We played well. Our outside kids came out and played hard," Hewelt said. "It was a big road win for us. We beat them in their place and felt good about the way we played."

The since-departed Boshart led the way for the WRams with 14 points. With Boshart out of action, the load for coach Annette Lynch's club shifts to senior forward Val Gorman, another 5-11 player with a reputation as a physical player.

Sidelined earlier in the season with a separated shoulder, Gorman has bounced back to become the main go-to player on the Rhody team.

"Gorman is extremely tough. She gave us fits in the first game," Hewelt said.

Gorman now leads the team in both scoring and rebounding, averaging 12.2 points and 8.7 caroms a game. Other starters for Rhode Island are sophomore Jennifer Vaughn and junior Beth McGinnis at forward and sophomore Kathy Greenberg and junior Audra Jaconetti at guard.

Gymnasts pick up win

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Last Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team expected to go down to East Stoudsburg University and blow the hometown boys out of their gym.

But that didn't happen. With freshman phenom Cal Booker and senior co-captain Bart Balocki feeling a little under the weather, coupled with the let-down disease, the Minutemen walked away with a ho hum 249.65-243.7 victory.

"If you know you're going to win, you usually don't have your best performance," UMass coach Roy Johnson said.

The win was an important one because it was over an Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League opponent. UMass is now 2-1 on the season, 1-1 in the EIGL.

"We had some guys sick so we had to pull together," Balocki said. "It definitely was not our best performance of the year."

The best performance of the afternoon was turned in by ESU's Kevin Ranson who won the all-around competition with a score of 52.55. Senior co-captain John Eggers finished second in the all-around for UMass with a 51.6 total.

Eggers had the only firsts for the Minutemen, winning the vault with a 8.95 and the high bar (9.15) with the only nine or better on the afternoon for UMass.

The best event of the day for UMass turned out to be the vault where it turned in a 43.35 with senior Jay Ronayne (8.9) and Eggers sweeping the first two places for the Minutemen.

UMass did not look good in the pommel horse, scoring just a 39.8, but the horse really has not been the strength of the Minutemen this season. It is their weakest event as it was last Saturday. The one bright spot on the pommel horse has been senior Joe Fitzgerald who has consistently turned in scores in the high 8s. Fitzgerald finished second in the meet by scoring a 8.85 to Ransom's 9.4.

Men swimmers in winning streak

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team has entered the spring semester on a roll. Since the season-opening loss to the Eagles of Boston College the Minutemen have taken nine straight meets, including their latest two victims, Connecticut and Vermont.

On Jan. 25, UMass made short work of the Huskies, winning 156-86 in Storrs, Conn. The Minutemen took first in all events but the 50-yard freestyle, the 200-yard individual medley and the 200-yard breaststroke. They left the gate fast, going 1-2 in the first three events and cruising from there. Diver Dan Chesnicka continued his double-win combination with first in the 1-meter and 3-meter competition. Roger Kennedy also swam well for UMass, grabbing three tops spots.

Back on the home front against Vermont last Saturday, the Minutemen had an even easier time. UMass trampled the visitors 169-79 behind a 400-yard medley sweep and four sets of first- and second-place finishes. UMass took all but two events from Vermont as Chesnicka maintained his winning ways with two firsts and Sean Rutherford grabbing three victories.

The Minutemen hope to stay on the winning track as they prepare for this weekend's battle with the University of New Hampshire. Minutemen coach Russ Yarworth expects little trouble, however.

"[UNH] is down. They're not a strong team," explained Yarworth. "They got beat by Vermont."

Most events in the upcoming meet will be cut in half, distance-wise, turning the competition into a sprint battle.

The focus of the meet for UMass will be on the three Minutemen who did not qualify for the New England championships, as these last meets will be the end to their seasons.

The rest of the Minutemen continue to train for the New Englands, working for a try at their third straight championship.

But first they must face some tough competition, including Boston University on Feb. 11.

Women swimmers knock off URI

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team continues to perform well, and now it's for a winning cause.

Coach Bob Newcomb saw his team swim over intersession as well as he has ever seen them swim, only to drop three of four meets to tough opponents. Last Saturday, the Minutewomen came through with another fine showing, this time good enough for a 181-116 win over the University of Rhode Island.

"We swam well across the board. There weren't as many personal bests, but people are holding their times," Newcomb said. "They're generally consistent."

The Minutewomen return to the water Saturday afternoon to face the University of New Hampshire in the first half of a doubleheader with the men. The women will swim at 1 p.m., followed by the men at 4:30.

Included among the URI meet's highlights were three new school records, a sure sign that the Minutewomen are going as well as ever.

The meet started with a bang, as the team of Laurie Schwarz, Melissa Waller, Sue Gorski and Michelle Leary set a new mark with a 1:54.53 in the 200-yard medley relay, almost a full second faster than the old time, and then freshman Tracy Young broke the 1000-yard freestyle record in 10:45.70 in a split time in her 1650 free race (18:05.81). Later, junior diver Debbie Mullen also reached a new best in the three-meter diving with a score of 255.1.

"The first two events we went right after them," Newcomb said.

Mullen's dive qualified her for the Nationals later this year.

"She dove very well. The amazing thing is that she's kind of hurt (shoulder) and we're stretching her season as far as we can," Newcomb said.

Mullen also pulled down first off the one-meter board, one of many Minutewomen to win more than one event. Michelle Leary took three firsts (200 free, 500 free and 200 individual medley), while Waller, along with her relay win, also captured the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke races. Other firsts went to Kim Morin in the 50 free, edging out teammate Patty Pike by .05 seconds, and Jodi Schwartz in the 200-yard butterfly.

Farrakhan calls for peace, unity

By JOSEPH L HILL Jr.
and JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Minister Louis Farrakhan responded to accusations of anti-Semitism and encouraged black students to build a community among themselves, as he spoke last night to a full house at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Farrakhan, the 56-year-old leader of the Nation of Islam, said a remark he made several years ago had been construed as anti-Semitic.

"How dare you write that I am a lover of Adolf Hitler," he said. "How can any black person love a man who hated blacks as well as Jews . . . He used his greatness for wicked ends and I called him 'wickedly great.'"

"To those students who see me as a Hitler, I wish you life," he said. "I don't wish to see any human forfeit life."

Farrakhan did not apologize for the harsh tone of his message of black unity.

"I hope white people see deeper into themselves when this is done," he said. "You [whites] are unfit to enter the afterworld. We [blacks] are also unfit to enter a new world reality, not a black or white supremacist reality, but a human supremacist reality."

The program, scheduled for 7:30, did not begin until nearly 9:00 because of rigid security in the Fine Arts Center. All 1,900 people entering the FAC had to pass through one of two metal detectors set up in the lobby of the building. Bow tie-clad members of Farrakhan's "Fruit of Islam" security team were positioned throughout the concert hall.

Farrakhan expressed amusement at the number of reporters and cameras in the front of the auditorium.

"I wonder if they thought there was going to be some kind of racial outbreak," he said.

One of the minister's chief criticisms was the failure of education to develop human beings.

"I see us as underdeveloped humans running out to space when we have not examined the space between our ears," he said.

He addressed the need for blacks to pursue practical education and use the knowledge gained to better their community.

"If the responsibility is on our shoulders, then let's take the responsibility upon ourselves and rebuild a civilizations anew," he said.

The black leader's speech, which lasted nearly three hours, was punctuated by whispers, shouts and mimics.

Women's status in American culture was another focal point of the evening.

"Religion has given the world its view on women and it's a sick view," he said. "We all come from a woman. The woman was our first teacher, our first nurse, our first joy in this life. . . Where there are no decent women there are no decent men, for the woman is the mother of civilization."

About George Bush's campaign reference to the nation's potential to be a "kinder, gentler nation," Farrakhan said, "I believe as this economic situation worsens, racial tension is going to build."

The presentation was sponsored by Black Agenda, Afrik-Am, Phi Beta Sigma fraternity, the Distinguished Visitors Program, the Minority Graduate Association and the Black Mass Communication Project.

1,500 protest speech

By THOMAS RODRIGUES

Almost as many people turned out to protest the lecture of Minister Louis Farrakhan last night as went to see the performance in the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts.

The protest outside the FAC went without incident save for a few eggs lobbed overhead and constant jeers from the masses.

A combined total of about 1,500 protesters, including members of the Jewish Defense League, the Jewish Defense Organization and concerned students, were on hand for Farrakhan's speech which got off to a late start due to tight security screening.

Around 7 o'clock, 600 silent candlelight vigil participants crowded near the reflecting pools outside the FAC after leaving the Campus Center Auditorium.

The group was met by six members of the Jewish Defense Organization, a New York based group dedicated to

Group informs alumnus of family's quake survival

By MARIA SACCHETTI

When Albert Abnousian was told the city of Leninakan was destroyed after a devastating earthquake struck Armenia last year, he feared he would never see his aunt and her family again.

Three weeks and several phone calls later, he was contacted by a member of the Armenian Relief Society in Watertown and given new hope.

His family safely escaped the earthquake, which killed more than 50,000 and injured another 6,000. They are residing now "somewhere in the capital city" of Yerevan.

The ARS established radio communication to Armenia after the earthquake and began to relay lists of survivors to their families in America, he said.

"It was horrible," said Abnousian, a University of Massachusetts graduate and a five-year member of the Armenian Club. "I knew three-fourths of the people were practically wiped out."

After the earthquake struck, the 18-member Armenian Club sponsored a 3-day table on the Campus Center Concourse and raised $2,000 in funds, he said. The money was sent directly to Armenia via the Armenian Relief Fund and was used for food and clothing.

This year, the club will continue to accept donations to aid the nation's reconstruction, he said.

Abnousian said he has neither seen nor heard from his aunt since the earthquake but hopes that she will contact him soon.

"All I know is that she is safe," he said.

Trustee lobbies for state funding

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Trustee's Office is launching a four-part program aimed at educating state legislators about the needs of public higher education.

"It's not so much the amount of funding we get," said Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice. "We need to have stable funding or this university is going to fall apart."

Orefice said legislators do not see the need for a well-funded public higher educational system in Massachusetts.

"Somehow the Northeast has never really been that strong in land grant public higher education," she said.

The program is important, Orefice said, because even in the best-case-budget-scenario for fiscal year 1990, the University is probably going to be underfunded by $7.5 million. Orefice based this figure on the state's FY-90 budget for higher education.

Orefice said the program, parts of which will be coordinated with the other state universities, colleges and community colleges, will include:

- A letter writing program by students and their families addressed at state

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A spokeswoman says David Frost will no longer anchor the new tabloid show "Inside Edition," which has yet to attract strong ratings since its debut more than three weeks ago.

Frost has gone on "special assignment" and will continue to conduct celebrity interviews "for however long it takes him to complete them," Allyson Kossow, a spokeswoman for the show, said Wednesday.

She noted that his profiles of boxer Mike Tyson and singers LaToya Jackson and Phil Collins were well received by viewers.

The trade newspaper Daily Variety reported that the Emmy-winning English journalist had been replaced by substitute anchor Bill O'Reilly because Frost was not compatible with the show's lowbrow format.

Ms. Kossow said O'Reilly, a former reporter with ABC News, was not scheduled to become permanent host of "Inside Edition," which premiered on Jan. 9.

NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE, England (AP) — Superstar soprano Dame Joan Sutherland has agreed to sing at a charity concert this fall, organizers of the event said yesterday.

The Oct. 11 concert hopes to raise at least $87,000 for the Prince's Trust, which helps needy young people, said Eric Jubb and Ged Graham, who work for the Tyneside Council.

Both men are devoted fans of the 62-year-old Australian diva, whose husband conductor Richard Bonynge, will serve as accompanist for the concert.

"We struck up a friendship with Dame Joan after she agreed to meet us after a performance at Covent Garden 10 years ago and we have been to see her every time she has been in Britain since," said Jubb. "The last time we asked her if she would like to sing at Newcastle we were absolutely bowled over when she said she would and told us to fix it up with her manager and agent."

PHOENIX (AP) — America's young people, laden with possessions, are glad to find the inner peace that comes with giving, says Mother Teresa, the world's best-known advocate of the poor.

"They say, 'We want the life of poverty, prayer and sacrifice that will lead me to the service of the poor,'" the 78-year-old Nobel Peace laureate said Wednesday, explaining the growth of her Missionaries of Charity order while other Roman Catholic orders face dwindling enrollment.

Mother Teresa, who found the order in Calcutta, India, in 1948, was in Phoenix to open the 401st chapter of the Missionaries of Charity and the 16th in the United States.

Her itinerary yesterday included a private Mass with Bishop Thomas O'Brien of the Phoenix Diocese, an evening prayer service at St. Simon and Jude Cathedral and meetings with Gov. Rose Mofford and Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard before speaking at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum. She was to depart early Friday for Tijuana, Mexico.

ST. JOHN'S, Antigua (AP) — Actress Robin Givens, estranged wife of heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson, has been trying to keep a low profile during a Caribbean vacation on the island of Antigua.

Givens, who arrived Monday with her mother, is staying at the luxurious St. James Club resort hotel, favored by such stars as pop singer Whitney Houston and Joan Collins

She has told reporters, "I'm not giving any interviews. I'm on holiday."

Despite apparent attempts to disguise herself by dressing in simple clothes and sunglasses, Givens and her mother been seen at local restaurant and casinos.

FARRAKHAN'S BODYGUARDS — Four members of the "Fruit of Islam," the security team for Minister Louis Farrakhan, sit and do their jobs last night in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

500 protest Farrakhan at candlelight vigil

By E. TERESA TOUEY
Collegian Correspondent

More than 500 University of Massachusetts students and area residents held a candlelight vigil outside the Fine Arts Center last night, protesting the Minister Louis Farrakhan even as the Black Muslim leader was preparing to speak inside the building.

Carol Holzberg, a Shutesbury resident and member of the Jewish Community of Amherst, watched her husband carry on his shoulders their 5-year-old daughter. "This is a statement in support of people against racism," she said.

In response to three television reporters' questions on the meaning of the vigil, Michael Burts, a black UMass senior who was protesting Farrakhan, said, "I'm basically supporting my brothers and sisters. My understanding from the press about Farrakhan's statements on self-reliance in the black community is a correct concern, but the way he is going about it is incorrect."

"All hell is going to break out tomorrow when my friends [see] me on television," he said. "Martin Luther King never preached division. And that's from a black man."

Students expressed many concerns during the quiet hour-long vigil. "We must protest," one student who wanted to remain anonymous said. "We must show people are aware so that he stops saying these things even though he is subtle."

> "This is a statement in support of people against racism."
> —Carol Holzberg

Another student added, "Farrakhan's not going to say anything controversial. He's not stupid. He'll make it look like we blew all this up."

"If enough people protest, other people will see that it is important that we don't settle things by war," a third student said.

But students were not the only ones who voiced their hope of unity and their dissatisfaction with Minister Farrakhan.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of the University of Massachusetts Hillel Foundation, said, "Racism and anti-Semitism victimize all of us."

Reverend Christopher Carlisle of the Episcopal Chaplaincy at UMass said there is a moral challenge to be sought to balance the right to free speech and the responsibility of responding to the moral substance of a speaking event.

"Racial and social division dissolve in our mutual courage to love one another," he said. "We must respond in a community effort to bind the community."

"Farrakhan's historical statements have effected divisions," he said.

The vigil was sponsored by the B'nai B'rith foundation, the United Christian Foundation, the Episcopal Chaplaincy at UMass, the staff of the Newman Center Catholic Campus Ministry at UMass and the Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations.

MCAD judge expresses concern with Farrakhan's comments

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

Judge Frederick Hurst, who ruled that the 1986 post-World Series brawl at the University of Massachusetts was racially motivated, returned to campus yesterday to implore students to reject intolerance and bigotry in all its forms.

Amid the tension of Minister Louis Farrakhan's visit, Hurst, a commissioner for the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination in Springfield, joined Leonard Zakim of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith for an open forum on race relations.

Their discussion, held in the Campus Center before a mostly white audience of about 40, focused on black/Jewish relations. But the two agreed that Farrakhan's anti-Semitic comments should be a concern to all ethnicities.

"The issue of Farrakhan should not be just a black/Jewish issue," Zakim said.

"It is important to recognize a person is a bigot regardless of race, religion or ethnicity."

Hurst was not as spirited in his comments on the black Muslim leader.

"I haven't formulated any extensive opinions about Farrakhan," Hurst said. "I know that he has made anti-Semitic statements, I admit that readily . . . I think it takes away from everything else he is saying. It renders him far less effective than he might be."

Hurst said that despite common beliefs, the United States has not come a long way since the 1960s in fostering respect among races. "I've really become cynical about intolerance," Hurst said. "It is just so widespread."

Zakim, who called Farrakhan the "most notorious anti-Semite of this century," said the media has exaggerated the black/Jewish rift: "We probably have the strongest relationship between

Steinberg verdict causes local outrage

By AMY COBURN

It has been more than a year since Joel Steinberg first entered the media's microscope, after the death of his 6-year-old adopted daughter Lisa, but a verdict delivered earlier this week charging Steinberg with manslaughter has placed him under the microscope again, and has angered several local professors and officials.

"What is the basis for reducing the charge for killing a defenseless child?" said Arlene Avakian from the Women's Studies Program of the reduced charge from second degree murder. "It is clear he killed her — he may have accidently killed her, but he clearly meant to hurt her."

More monitoring of families is needed, she said, especially when there are signs that suggest abuse.

Avakian said she was particularly disturbed over the Department of Social Services policy that makes "keeping the family together" their first priority in many states.

A balance between a family's right to privacy and a child's right of protection is certainly necessary, Avakian said. "However, when the sanctity of family overrides the safety of a child, something is really out of whack," she added.

Stacy Roth, coordinator of the Educator/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, said, "It's unfortunate that the sentence was pleaded down

SGA settlement questioned

Judiciary may have overstepped bounds

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The validity of an out-of-court agreement allowing Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz to take office as Student Government Association co-presidents will not be resolved until legal counsel is found, according to several SGA officers.

The agreement, signed by student justices John Sanchez and Kathleen White on Dec. 16, appears to drop all injunctions barring Silkoff and Rabinowitz from office and immediately recognizes the pair as co-presidents.

SGA Speaker Robert Fadel said the purpose of the student judiciary is to solve controversies, and the agreement does not have the power to place Silkoff and Rabinowitz in office.

"It's nothing a court would ever do," he said. "The judiciary never legislates."

Fadel disagrees with Silkoff and Rabinowitz's contention that they do not have to be ratified by the senate in order to take office.

"It is the power of the student senate to make an election final by ratifying it," he said, citing chapter 10 in the SGA bylaws. "[Silkoff and Rabinowitz] have to be ratified."

A document issued on Dec. 28 by Northampton Superior Court justice Elizabeth Porada clearly states the pair must be ratified by the senate, Fadel said.

The statement denies Silkoff and Rabinowitz's move for a preliminary injunction against former SGA attorney general Bill Collins, the UMass Board of Trustees, and members of the student judiciary.

Porada wrote, "the only remaining hurdle" for Silkoff and Rabinowitz would be senate ratification of their election.

Silkoff said Judge Porada's motives for including the issue of senate ratification in her statement are unclear, but maintains the agreement is a binding court order.

Fadel refused to predict whether the senate will ratify the election but Silkoff said they have a majority vote in the senate.

As acting presidents, Fadel said he, SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins and Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice are in control, but added it would be better if the controversy was dropped.

"If this issue wasn't around . . . we'd be doing fine," he said.

Orefice also said it would be best for the SGA if Silkoff and Rabinowitz simply dropped the issue.

"I don't agree with the suit," Orefice said. "I thought it was very dangerous to the SGA — going to the administration saying the students can't handle the situation themselves and asking the Board of Trustees to resolve the issue."

"It would be best for the SGA if they did give up," she said. "But from their hearts, I don't think they can."

Filkins said she does not know which document is correct, and is seeking advice from faculty in the legal studies, political science and education departments who are also lawyers.

The search has been delayed because University restrictions prohibit the SGA from hiring private counsel and the Legal Services Organization will not handle student vs. student cases, she said.

Filkins said until it is known conclusively whether senate ratification is necessary for Silkoff and Rabinowitz to take office, they will remain co-presidents-elect.

"The issue is far from over," she said. "The shorter the time they have in office, the more difficult it becomes."

Shooting squirrels? G-o-o-d

The other day I was on a nature walk in a secluded, wooded area when I saw my friend Duane Maniacalis who was pummelling bushes with a Chinese-made, AK-47 semiautomatic assault rifle.

Bob Bobala

"Hey Duane!" he shouted to him above the sound of gunfire.

He stopped shooting and looked over toward me. "Hey, how are you? How was your winter break?"

"Oh, pretty good," I replied.

At this point, a squirrel crept out from underneath the shrubs he was firing upon and stared up at Duane. Its little head bobbed up and down for a second and then it dashed back into the cover of the bushes. Duane immediately unloaded a couple of rounds into the shrubs, sending twigs and leaves sailing through the air.

"Hey, isn't that an AK-47? The same kind of rifle Patrick Purdy used to blow away five kids on an elementary school playground in California a couple weeks ago?"

"Yep. It's the same thing. Only difference is that he bought his in Oregon for 350 dollars. I only paid a 129 for mine. I got it when I was in California last summer."

"How'd you get it? Is it stolen?"

"No man, I got it in a store. All I needed was a driver's license."

"That's it?"

"That's it."

"It's a good tension releaser. You know. The semester's getting under way, there's a lot of pressure on me — classes, grades, et cetera. After sitting through an hour of Econ 311, I come out here and blow off a few rounds. It relaxes me."

"But, couldn't you do that with a BB gun? I mean, isn't a semi-automatic assault rifle a bit dangerous and unnecessary."

"Hey, are you one of those anti-gun people?"

"Well, no . . . I just think . . ."

"Look, those anti-gun people just don't understand. They say that these semi-automatic assault weapons have only one purpose: to kill people. They say that there is no need to hunt with a gun like this. They say there are plenty of other rifles that can be used. . . . Well, they're wrong. Maybe you don't need one of these babies for hunting deer and other big animals, a shotgun is adequate for that. But this rifle is a necessity for at least one thing: squirrel hunting. Squirrels are just too quick to hunt with an ordinary rifle."

"I see."

"I mean, sure, you could sneak up on one of these critters with a BB gun and shoot it from behind. But what challenge is there in that? You have to be able to shoot a squirrel from at least 20 feet away to make it interesting. And there's no way one of these squirrels will let you get him with a regular rifle. They're too smart and fast. You need to spray them with rapid fire. You need a gun like the AK-47 that is capable of firing from a hundred round drum."

Just then the same squirrel popped out from behind the debris of branches. It looked up at this man with the rifle and seemed to shake its head with disgust. Duane immediately opened fire and the thing darted safely back to its cover. "See what I mean?" he choked. "They're quick suckers."

"Yeah, I see."

"You want to blow off a few rounds?"

"Oh, no thank you Ah, Look, I've really got to go. Good seeing you, Duane."

"Likewise."

Next time, I'll put hotels on Boardwalk

I wait every holiday season for that precious moment. I avoid eye contact, try not to look anxious, breath normally, and assess this year's approach. After fourteen years, I can't reasonably use the same one — that would run the risk of one of them catching on. I glance at each of the familiar faces around the oak table.

Alise Harfield

Everyone looks bored. Good, it's nearly time. They've swallowed enough danish, inhaled enough Nescafe for the next three reunions. Now they need a nightcap for that special first night together. (Luckily they have me, albeit the youngest with the freshest ideas.) I wait until I'm sure that unmitigated boredom has set in. One of them suggests watching Dan Rather on the news.

With words as old as the last time they were used 365 days ago. I say with nonchalance, "Oh, I think a Monopoly game is still somewhere in my closet."

The reaction never varies, "Don't you ever tire of losing that game Alise?" I can only guess which one said it, for I'm off and running to my room thinking, this will be my year!

I gingerly remove the box bottom (the top was long discarded after I accidentally set fire to it after a big loss), revealing an immaculate rectangle of closet outlined by gray dust. I race back to the table before someone discovers a football game on television. I announce, "I'm a year older now, so prepare for defeat. And I get to be the banker!"

"No way. You're still too young to count!"

Fine, I think. I land on Baltic Ave. I buy it amongst snickers from the rest. At least Boardwalk is unowned. Then I land on Chance. My houses get assessed, although I am the only player that hasn't a monopoly. Someone suggests I retain the card until it becomes valid. I just roll my eyes — there's still a chance of an upset!

Then someone lands on Boardwalk. Darn it! Why not me?

"Oh," I say with a weak smile, in an even weaker attempt at sincerity to perhaps evoke pity early in the game for needed monetary support I will need later in the game, "Congrats."

"Hey Alise, what did you say about being a year smarter?"

I love my family. I really do.

Two hours later, I own Baltic Ave., a utility, and the B&O railroad. My best rolls were a series of three doubles that landed me in jail for fifteen minutes, where I was safe. I got a monopoly from a deal where I gave one of them a monopoly on the most expensive property. A turn later, I mortgaged it to pay for having landed on their monopoly, complete with houses. A mere $1275. I begin to feel like I'm losing control. Whose idea was this, anyway? I should have stopped after that lemon danish. I frown. somebody notices.

"Well jeez, Alise. Don't sit there pouting. It was your idea to . . ."

"Shut-up! Just be quiet! I was trying to promote family spirit, warmth, togetherness, FUN! Why do you have to turn it into competition?! I'm never playing with you guys again!"

I throw my pink and white pile of money on the board and run to my room, grabbing a deck of cards on the way for a game of solitaire. I am itching to win anything now. The thought of cheating thrills me. As I deal a hand one of them yells, "Hey thanks for your $14 Alise! I just landed on Free Parking!"

So much for the maxim, live and learn

Silkoff's not his darling

I was disappointed, but not surprised to see that the Collegian has provided a forum for Shari Silkoff to spout her absurd rhetoric.

Silkoff contends that she interprets a "consent decree" to mean she is now an "SGA co-President." The article fails to mention that a Massachusetts Superior Court judge has already interpreted the consent decree.

On Dec. 28, 1988, Judge Elizabeth Porada denied an injunction request by Silkoff and Rabinowitz. in her written decision, Porada stated that the "remaining hurdle" for Silkoff and Rabinowitz "is a vote of the Student Senate ratifying their election."

It is the Superior Court judge's interpretation that is binding on the senate and not Silkoff's.

Election should have been resolved in SGA

In November of 1988 I was appointed as a justice by the Student Government Association Senate at large. I watched as the Silkoff/Rabinowitz case wore on until the Judiciary issued a final statement declaring that co-presidents were unconstitutional. The March 1988 election results were null and void. On Dec. 7, I became aware that Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz had filed a complaint against the judiciary on the grounds of "political discrimination." It was the feeling of the Judiciary that they had done no wrong. I was horrified to learn that the "Judiciary" backed down from their decision on the Silkoof/Rabinowitz case.

I wondered how the "Judiciary" had come to a decision without even consulting me or a majority of the justices. When I heard that it was possible that Silkoff and Rabinowitz might sue the already financially strapped SGA for almost $10,00 in legal fees, I knew it was time to get involved. Justices John Sanches and Kathy White had been bullied into backing down from their moral convictions, sacrificing the credibility of the Judiciary, and endangering the Student Activities Trust Fund.

After reading the complaint, I saw that the case clearly never should have left the SGA level, and had no legal merit. Silkoff and Rabinowitz were using "discrimination" charges as a smokescreen and a free American Civil Liberties Union attorney to coerce two justices into signing a document they did not agree with. I filed a motion to dismiss the case, and a motion to immediately decide the case in favor of the University Judiciary. The case is now in Superior Court. The consent decree is no longer relevant or legally binding. Silkoff and Rabinowitz are not co-presidents. Their scare tactics have failed for the time being.

Jewish rights through "force and strength," and 25 members of the Jewish Defense League, a similar organization which arrived from Boston.

UMass police stopped the crowd from spilling over to the FAC entrance with an orange plastic barrier and a line of 15 officers standing abreast of each other to maintain the perimeter.

Protesters shouted slogans like, "Death to Farrakhan," "Human Rights Now, Farrakhan No" into the cold night breeze. Picket signs being held said, "Just say no to hate," and that Farrakhan is, "Jim Jones without the Kool-Aid."

Television news teams from Boston channels 4, 5 and 7, and channels 22 and 40 of Springfield recorded protesters outside as several newspaper personnel watched Farrakhan inside.

Executive Director of the JDL, Mike Slomich, said his group was here as a counter-force to the "bigot who will bring on the second Holocaust," meaning Farrakhan.

Much to the dismay of some bystanders, Slomich and his people tried to whip the crowd into a frenzy with chants like "Farrakhan must die," and jeering Farrakhan's personal security force, the "Fruit of Islam," as they passed by.

Mordechai Levy, leader of the JDO, waged his own war of words, separate from the JDL crowd, choosing to lay down a convincing argument rather than shouting.

"This is not a struggle between blacks and Jews. It's a struggle between those who love this country and those who hate it, between racists and anti-racists. We are here for human rights and not for Farrakhan," Levy said.

"I think this shows that people believe all the hype run by the media. They only print half the story and then it leads to this hysteria," said Amherst College freshman Keith Taylor.

Most of the students in the admission line said they could only read so much about Farrakhan, and the only way to find out about Farrakhan was to listen to him for themselves.

"No one here [in line] is talking about killing. The only ones talking about killing someone are them [pointing to the protesters]," said Thomas Williams who has seen Farrakhan six times.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who was briefly on hand outside the event said, "I think it's an experience I could just as well have done without. But I think the University lived up to the challenge of free speech."

ethnic groups in the United States despite press accounts of derisiveness."

"The relationship remains something that can be relied on when push comes to shove," Zakim said.

The two also agreed students can benefit from Farrakhan, but not until they engage in a dialogue and agree to reject all forms of bigotry.

The forum was co-sponsored by the UMass chapter of Hillel and the Office of Human Relations.

"The whole purpose of all these programs is to better the understanding between the various groups on this campus," said Alisa Berkowitz, president of Hillel. "This is just one of many programs. I think it's excellent because people can educate themselves about subject."

Hurst, who said he came because "Lenny invited me," said he has not followed developments at UMass since he issued a comprehensive report two years ago on how the University could best eradicate racism on campus. He said he has every confidence in the Office of Human Relations, which monitors the campus' social environment and issues periodical assessments of its progress.

"I have not made UMass my career following," Hurst said.

to manslaughter. Child abuse is the one area where the penalties don't seem to fit the crime."

Roth said she felt the Steinberg verdict should have been murder. "The nature of what happened was not some form of accident," she said, and added our society tends to view crimes like this only in terms of how they should be punished.

"In many ways punishment is like a band-aid," Roth said. "It covers the problem without treating it."

Abuse may stem from individuals and their behavior, society's influence and power imbalances in our society like the ones between children and adults, males and females and the young and the elderly, she said.

Roth said unless these imbalances are dealt with at the source, abusive situations may result. "Prevention and intervention need to be given equal billing," she said.

Roth and Avakian agreed that in many ways the system needs to be altered. "Our society favors the nuclear family almost to an extreme," Roth said. "Children are placed in situations which can be harmful in order to maintain the family at all costs."

However, Roth hesitates to suggest stronger ways for the state to intervene in possible abuse situations. Damage can be done to the child and family if they are wrongly investigated, Roth said.

She said she believes there are few falsely reported abuse cases. "Especially if it is a child who comes forward – they know full well that there will be repercussions and danger to themselves resulting from their report," she said.

About Lisa Steinberg's teachers, neighbors and friends having seen and reported the visible signs of abuse, Roth said, "There's a certain amount of training that a doctor or social worker has that makes them better qualified to see the signs. But that doesn't mean that an average person wouldn't recognize a child who is being abused." More should be done to educate the public about child abuse, she added.

Beth Dickinson, a protective social worker for the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, also believed that Steinberg's charge should not have been reduced to manslaughter. "When you strike [a child], their chances of being severely hurt are greater than with an adult," she said.

Dickinson also agreed that our society has become too caught up in the punishment aspect of abuse cases. "Our organization is working on educating the community with the goal of prevention," she said. "People need to be aware of who to call."

Roth said, "Our society has not made it a priority to look out for each other. That needs to change."

representatives asking for support and detailing the benefits of public higher education.

- Creating a service where representatives from the Graduate Student Senate or the trustee's office speak to students in the residence halls about the budget cuts and their effects.
- Creating a state-wide coordinating committee to organize political action committees for lobbying efforts and to educate Massachusetts citizens of the importance of public higher education.
- Planning of a week-long public higher education awareness week, tentatively scheduled for March 28-31, culminating with a rally involving all the colleges and universities in the state at the Massachusetts Statehouse.

Concerning the rally, Orefice said, "I'm hoping for a lot of representation from all the schools. I don't want it to be a hundred students outside the Statehouse with a couple of signs."

"We won't do it if it doesn't look like there's going to be a lot of students participating," she said.

Orefice hopes to make students aware of the dangers of the tuition retention program now employed by the University to raise revenue.

In a tuition retention program, the University is allowed to keep any tuition increase, such as the 7.9 percent increase of 1988, for their own use instead of sending the money into the general coffers of the higher educational system, Orefice said.

"It's basically a way for the state to divorce itself from the partnership of publicly funded higher education," she said.

Wintertime releases prove to be top notch in 1989

By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

This Christmas season saw the release of a surprising number of adult-oriented films, relatively "low-concept" films that don't rely on spectacle to attract an audience.

The three most notable dramas still playing their first runs in the area have to be The Accidental Tourist, Mississippi Burning and Rain Man. Each is exceptionally well performed, written and directed.

The Accidental Tourist is my favorite of the lot, possibly my favorite film of the year (I have to go over my list). William Hurt is still playing only a slight variation of his usual character - soft-spoken, somewhat introverted, a bit cinical - but that character happens to be ideally suited to the film's needs. Hurt plays Macon Leary, a soft-spoken, introverted, cinical author of travel guide books who, ironically, hates to leave home. He hates, in fact, to have anything threaten the precariously balanced order of his life. Geena Davis's character, Muriel Pritchett, is the catalyst in the drama of his life's shake-up. She represents all that Macon opposes: spontaneity; disorder; honesty; commitment. Writer/Director Lawrence Kasdan has cast Davis in a role that will surely prove to be a breakthrough in this model-turned-actress's career. Tourist gets a 4.0.

Mississippi Burning is Alan Parker's attempt at scathing social commentary. It's a well-acted film that suffers from a lack of credibility that comes mainly from director Parker's overblown treatment of his subject. He has turned a south strained by racial tension into an America torn by civil war. Gene Hackman's performance as the jaded FBI investigator is more than outstanding. It may be his best dramatic work ever. An Oscar nomination seems very likely. Willem (The Last Temptation of Christ) Dafoe has been resurrected for this film as Hackman's youthful colleague, whose methods and ideals are a constant source of friction between the two reluctant partners. The film is entertaining, but always maintains a certain distance from its audience, never quite earning the sympathy it seems to cry for. 3.0.

Rain Man is a stroke of-marketing genius, pairing of Tom Cruise and Dustin Hoffman. It has resulted in more than a moneymaking machine, however. Rain Man also happens to be one of the year's finest films. Sensitively directed by Barry Levinson, the film chronicles the blossoming relationship of two long-separated brothers, one of whom (Hoffman) has been institutionalized for most of his life as an autistic-savant. Hoffman's performace is brilliant, and one may find it difficult to remember what he was like before this film, so convincing is his protrayal. Tom Cruise is surprisingly good in his role as the opportunistic brother who hopes to profit from Raymond's (Rain-man's) uncanny mathematical ability (he can calculate astronomical figures faster than a pocket calculator). Hoffman will probably take the Oscar. The film will definitely earn a Best Picture nomination. 4.0.

We got an answer. Last semester, we sent off a letter to the makers of Disco II: The Revenge requesting an interview with anyone involved. Here's the response we got:

Adam Campbell and James Cole:

Thank you for your encouraging letter of inquiry. All of us here are very excited about the project, and hope that our enthusiasm will be shared by this summer's filmgoers.

I don't know if I'm someone you'd like to talk to, but, frankly, everyone else has been too busy to respond to your letter.

If you are in the area over the next couple of months, I'd be more than happy to give you a behind-the-scenes look at the making of Disco II. Feel free to call or write.

Area films for lonely souls

By DEREK LEIF

There you are, reading this alone in the dining commons. No one is sitting with you. You have no friends. The weekend stretches out before you like a long, bleak stretch of the Masspike, and your radar detector is broken.

Well, relax pal, because I've been there. I know what it's like to have to make due with being all alone for the weekend. I don't have any friends either. Or maybe not. Ah, I don't know. Look, these roundups of the weekend's movies are probably the most boring things to write, so don't blame me. Besides, you have no friends. Then again, though, neither do I.

Amherst College is showing Guess Who's Coming to Dinner tonight and tomorrow at 8 and 10 p.m. in their Campus Center auditorium. It's a good film, and it gives you a chance to see the campus of a school that charges about twice as much as we do.

Mount Holyoke is showing Quadrophenia tonight and A Fish Called Wanda tomorrow. Both will be shown at 7 and 9, and it'll cost you a few bucks. As for the campus, it's pretty much the same deal as Amherst, except that there are primarily rich women there instead of rich men.

Sounds thrilling to me, and just remember: when you're alone, depressed, and have no friends, dark places are best. It's either the movies or Roy Orbison records. Take your pick.

What's up in the Valley

If you're looking for something more than a movie, here are some happenings this weekend in the Valley:

The New England String Quartet, the UMASS post-graduate quartet in residence, will perform in Bezanson recital hall tonight at 8.

The concert is free, and will feature the works of Schubert, Amherst composer Harold Meltzer, and others.

On Saturday, the University will kick off ArtsAmerica '89, a minifestival designed to give special recognition to the excellence of American performing artists. The festival will begin tomorrow night with a performance by the American Indian Dance Theatre.

Described as "a unique company of Native American dancers and musicians selected from many different tribes and regions across North America," the troup accompanies its traditional dances with authentic tribal drums, bells, rattles, and the wooden flute.

They will perform in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at at 8. For ticket information, call 545-2511.

Also on Saturday, horn player Martin Hackleman will give a recital, master class, and one-day-workshop in Bezanson recital hall. The event will run from 10 a.m. to 5, and for further information, call 545-2227.

At Amherst College - also on Saturday - jazz guitarist Peter Orphanos will give a free faculty recital in Buckley Recital Hall.

Also at Amherst, Nigel Coxe and Friends will present "A Gershwin Afternoon" in Buckley recital at 3. There will be admission charged, so call the college to check for the cost.

Have a good weekend!

Gunslinger shoots blanks

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Dark Tower: The Gunslinger
Stephen King
Plume Publishers

If you pick up a Stephen King book expecting to be terrified (a la Salem's Lot), The Dark Tower: The Gunslinger is not for you.

Neither is it for you if you're expecting a good old-fashioned story.

The Gunslinger is the first novel in The Dark Tower series, which is being heralded as Stephen King's "crowning achievement". The second novel, The Drawing of the Three, will be released in March. Both have been previously released in very limited editions, (Gunslinger in 1982, Drawing of the Three in '87). King forecasts the series as running about 3000 pages at its completeion, but expects to die before he ever completes it.

The hero of this story is Roland, the last of the Gunslingers. In a mystical, frontier setting on another planet, Roland pursues his evil mentor, The Man in Black, whom he has defeated once before. The Man in Black holds the key to the Dark Tower, which holds something "too great for the finite mind to grasp".

The good versus evil theme, so prevalent in this book, has been used far more effectively by King in The Stand, where he wove the stories of several interesting characters together. In The Gunslinger, the people that Roland meets during his quest,(the sex starved Alice, and the innocent Earth boy Jake), play no major roles and serve only to elongate the story.

Even the character of Roland is sketchy. He has a mysterious air about him, and is not easily related to.

The problem is that King, who once described his work as "the literary equivalent of a Big Mac and fries", is attempting to create a five course gourmet dinner, and, just as McCaviar would fail, so does The Gunslinger.

The humor and character development that is so prevalent in all of King's work, is noticeably absent here. Instead, he bombards us with annoying Thoreau-like setting detail: " . . . Shelves of rock protruded from the rising land like the arms of giant easychairs buried in the earth."

Stephen King should be applauded for trying to break out of the horror writer mold. Yet in trying to achieve his new identity, he has abandoned all of the components that make his writing so appealing. Here's to hoping that King still has a few Big Macs in him.

UMass high scorers Erika Baxter, Kim Grady and Erin Klier will be matched up against Yale's Tracey Lassin and Alyse Forcellini.

Grady, a freshman, turned in the best performance of her brief career against Cornell, accumulating 36.3 points in the all-around (tops in the competition). Klier scored a 35.65, also a personal best.

Yale's Lassin, who specializes in the uneven bar and the floor exercise routines, was the highest all-around scorer in the Brown meet, and second best vs. George Washington. Forcellini, whose strongest at the vault, tallied the second highest total against Brown.

Following Yale, the road swing will bring the Minutewomen to the University of New Hampshire and the University of Southern Connecticut on consecutive Saturdays.

Added to that letdown was the loss of freshman Cal Booker who became ill before the meet. Senior co-captain Bart Balocki was also feeling a little under the weather, and though he was able to participate in the meet, was not at 100 percent.

But Booker and Balocki both will be in this meet and in good health provided nothing happens between today and 1 p.m. tomorrow. However, senior Jay Ronayne will not. Ronayne tore a small tendon in the arch of his foot last Saturday in the Stroudsburg meet.

To make up for the loss of Ronayne, sophomore Dave Dinucci will be inserted into the starting lineup in the high bar and the floor exercise with senior Tim Myers filling in for Ronayne in the vault event.

Johnson feels very confident that UMass will walk away from this meet with a big win but he points to the second event of the afternoon as the one that could lock things up.

"The key event will be pommel horse," Johnson said. "Because if we can hit a 42 which I think we should be able to, it'll be all over."

This will be a challenge for the Minutemen who have not broken 40 this year on the horse. UMass' only consistent performer on the pommel horse has been senior Joe Fitzgerald who has hit high 8's in the first three meets of the year.

Fitzgerald could get some help tomorrow from senior Roberto Weil. Weil was redshirted last year and has not returned to top form yet but this could be the meet.

"Roberto Weil is an outstanding gymnast," Johnson said. "He just hasn't put it together. He's starting to look better in practice. He is a very consistent gymnast."

Cortland, who is led by Ricki Daniels and Greg Curtis, historically has given the Minutemen all that they could handle though UMass has dominated the series between the two.

"They always give us a very good meet, very competitive," Johnson said. "They've only beat us one time in about eight years."

The Minutewomen had five players in double figures, led by Wilbor. Zullo added 15, Freeman 13, McCusker 12 and Moran 10 in her best game yet off the bench, providing UMass with needed depth at the right times.

the Sunday meet according to LaFreniere because of an Achilles' problem. The Ocean States will probably be the last chance for LaVallee and others who haven't qualified for the New Englands to do so because the team's last meet (Feb. 18 against Dartmouth with Fitchburg) will not present fast track conditions. Smith is close to qualifying, with her best time being only two seconds behind the New England standard of 5:07 in the mile. Ambrose has qualified for both the New England's and the ECAC's in the 400 and for the N.E. in the 200.

The entrants in the 5000 and the 800 are each a New England qualifier and one who is looking to break the standard. Peers and St. Laurent are the qualified and Holt and LeClerc are looking to qualify.

LaFreniere has Helen Balodouras, Simone Marisseau, Diane Ozzolak, and Tina White (who will be making her UMass debut) in the 20-pound indoor weight and Balodouras and Marisseau will be throwing the shot as well.

Overall, LaFreniere is very pleased with her team's progress. "They worked hard through intersession and they went to meets tired," said LaFreniere.

Lucky UMass gets a win

Freshman Jenny Moran goes in for two of her 10 points in last night's 77-70 win at the Cage.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

From the fans' point of view, it was a thrilling game; from the coach's standpoint, it shouldn't have been.

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team played the University of Rhode Island to a much closer finish than it would have liked, fortunate to force an overtime and pull out a 77-70 win last night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

UMass evens its record at 9-9 on the year, including 4-6 in the Atlantic 10 conference. Rhody is now 3-15 and 1-8.

Because of those low numbers from the visitors, it was expected to be an easy win for the Minutewomen. It wasn't, and it almost wasn't a win at all, UMass needing a Keyburn McCusker bucket with 27 seconds left and then a URI turnover on the next trip downcourt to push the game into an extra five-minute frame.

"What we did tonight was very embarrassing. We didn't play with intensity or play with our hearts," UMass coach Kathy Hewelt said. "We were extremely fortunate to get a win."

UMass stumbled out of the locker room, clicking on just two of their first 11 shots. At the midpoint juncture of the first half, the WRams were holding a 9-8 lead, neither team threatening Loyola Marymount's records in any way.

Both teams recovered to shoot over 40 percent in the half, UMass pulling out to a slim 29-27 halftime edge. After taking a 41-37 lead on a baseline jumper by freshman Jenny Moran with 13:45 left, UMass was on top until URI guard Kathy Greenberg buried one of her three three-pointers on the night from the top of the key with 42 seconds to play, giving the visitors a 61-59 advantage.

UMass took a timeout to get everything settled, and McCusker tied it with her hoop with 27 ticks to the buzzer. Rhody, with the shot clock off, could wind it down for one last shot, but Greenberg threw it out of bounds with 10 seconds left. After Zullo was fouled at midcourt (non-shooting foul), UM tried to set up a winner, but Trish Riley's 25-footer at the buzzer missed.

Val Gorman (a game-high 20 points) hit two freebies to give URI a brief 63-61 lead before UMass took it over with seven straight points, six from the line as Rhody starters Beth McGinnis and Jennifer Vaughn were fouling out.

Greenberg hit another trey with 2:51 left, but Beth Wilbor (17 points, 14 boards to lead UM) hit from the foul line and Christel Zullo nailed four free throws, including two on a technical after Rhody took a timeout with none left. That, in effect clinched it, UMass successfully running a quick-pass offense to kill the clock.

"We showed enough character and smarts down the stretch," Hewelt said.

Minutemen head west to face Cortland ...

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team is about to make a trip to a place which brings back some fond memories.

Today, the Minutemen, 2-1, will make the trip to Cortland State where two years ago they set a school record for points in a meet with a 267.75.

But while UMass coach Roy Johnson has said earlier in the year "We should break the school record this year", it is unlikely the Minutemen will repeat that feat of two years ago in this, a very early stage of the season.

Johnson is looking for his troops to score in the low 260's tomorrow, which is very reasonable considering the Minutemen broke 258 in their first meet of the season with the Naval Academy.

But how the Minutemen score in this meet might not depend solely on their own efforts. UMass has risen to the occasion this season when it has had to. Navy was a tough team. But East Stroudsburg was not, and though the Minutemen took home a win in that meet, their score fell almost 10 points from their loss to Navy.

Women's swimming to entertain 'Cats

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Now that the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team has gotten back into the winning lane, it will look to keep it up tomorrow afternoon against the University of New Hampshire (1:00) at Boyden Pool.

The Minutewomen are coming off several fine intersession performances, the last of which was a 181-116 win over the University of Rhode Island last weekend which raised their record on the year to 6-4.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb anticipates a better meet from the Wildcats than Rhode Island.

"I expect New Hampshire to be a great meet. They beat Rhode Island, but not as badly," Newcomb said. "They're coming in off a good recruiting year with a lot of freshmen."

Still, Newcomb thinks UMass has the upper hand on the 'Cats.

"We stack up very well. We match up well with some of their strengths," he said.

The best of the pack for New Hampshire are the sprinters, but they are going up against a very talented UMass lot.

"They have a bunch of sprinters, but none anywhere near Michelle (Leary), Patty Pike, Kim Morin and Theresa Jacobs," Newcomb said. "They also have a good distance swimmer, but again I don't think she can keep up with Tracy Young, and they have a decent [butter]flyer, but she can't keep with Sue [Gorski] and Jody [Schwarz]."

The Minutewomen have been tearing up both the personal and school record books. In meets against Boston College and the University of Buffalo, the Minutewomen set 23 personal bests. They topped that against Rhody by rewriting three school records (200 medley relay, Tracy Young in the 1000 free and Debbie Mullen in the three-meter dive).

One thing the team will have to safeguard against will be for New Hampshire to come in and get too riled up.

"New Hampshire is going to come in charged to beat us, but we're not going to let that happen," Newcomb said.

Tomorrow's meet will be the first half of a home doubleheader for the UMass swim teams. The men's team will also be hosting New Hampshire at Boyden Pool at 4:30 p.m.

Sports Staff

Attention Sports Staff: There will be mandatory meeting for all sports writers who have a beat this semester at 12:30 p.m. on Sunday, Feb.5. The meeting will only last 15 minutes but it is important for us to speak with you about your beats, responsibilities, and plans for becoming a staff member.

If you cannot attend the meeting, please call Jim or Ronn.—Thank You.

Tri-meet next challenge for W. track

By RICK SETO
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's track team has only one thing on its mind when it heads for the Ocean State Invitational at Brown University on Saturday: qualifying as many athletes as possible, the team has already qualified six players for the New England's two weeks from now.

The Ocean State Invitational is considered the Rhode Island state championships for that state's universities, which include Brown, Providence, and the University of Rhode Island. Thus, UMass (which was invited to the meet last year) will not be included in the team scoring and Minutewomen athletes will not be eligible for awards.

"We're using this meet for qualifying for the New England's," said coach Julie LaFreniere. "Also it's a good track. It'll give our kids a chance to face some tough competition. URI has very strong throwers, even though they're known for the middle distance. Also, Brown has good sprinters, including a 53-second quarter-miler."

LaFreniere will enter Precious Hill and Laura LaVallee in the 3000m race, Shana Smith in the mile, Lee Ann Ambrose in the 200 and 400, Kristin Peers and Kathy Holt in the 5000, Sue McFadyen in the 55 and 200, and Michelle St. Laurent and Cheryl LeClerc in the 800.

Hill has already qualified for the 1000 meters and the mile for the New England's. LaVallee, however, is still questionable for

...south-bound Minutewomen will battle Yale

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

After piling up a 3-0 record and 525.40 points in its first two week's work, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team heads south tomorrow for a date with Yale, the first of three consecutive road encounters.

The Minutewomen, who came within two tenths of a point of breaking the school scoring record last Saturday against Cornell, are looking to beat up upon their second consecutive Ivy league opponent. "We're going for the record," said coach Alfie Mitchell.

"We're going for 180, and I think we can do it this weekend," he said. "We need to get good scores early on the road, which sets ourselves up in the judges eyes and establish a reputation."

Mitchell's optimism isn't tempered by the fact that the Elis have beaten the Minutewomen in each of the last four years (this is, after all, his first season in these parts). Yale's most recent outing was a 175.65 effort over Brown; the win evened their record at 1-1 after a season-opening loss to George Washington University.

Chinese New Year begins

By COSMO MACERO Jr.
Collegian Staff

For many, the merry but tiresome holiday season ended on the second day of this still-infant year. Today, however, marks the beginning of the Year of the Snake for the Asian community, as the Chinese New Year begins.

A celebration which originally lasted for a month, the Chinese New Year now encompasses a three-day period of rejoicing.

The Chinese people believe the "God of the Kitchen" reports to the "Jade Emperor" in heaven on Dec 23 of each year, detailing the happenings of the past year. The kitchen god returns to earth on New Year's Eve (Feb. 5), and the celebration begins.

Traditionally, families set out food to nourish their dead ancestors, who are "received back" at dawn so they may enjoy the holiday period with their loved ones.

Lucy Nguyen, a native of Vietnam, is an academic advisor in the University's Bilingual Collegiate Program.

"The Chinese New Year is very important to family life. The spirits of our ancestors can be with us for three days," she said.

At midnight on New Year's Eve, firecrackers are lit to chase away evil spirits and ensure only good tidings for the coming year.

In the holiday tradition, the first day of the year should be a leisurely one, Nguyen said.

"If you work hard the first day of the year, you will have to work hard all year," she said.

Likewise, those who enjoy themselves during the celebration will have a pleasant year ahead of them.

Saturday night, the Chinese Students Club hosted a New Year's Eve dinner at the Peking Garden restaurant in Hadley. For the 60 some Vietnamese students at the University, the New Year's celebration will be postponed until Saturday. At 2 p.m. that day, there will be a mass at the Newman Center, followed by a dinner at 5 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe.

Protestors walk outside the Amherst Newsroom Saturday, picketing the store for its sale of pornographic magazines.

Pornography in local store protested

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

About 50 activists picketed the Amherst Newsroom Saturday to protest the sale of pornographic magazines and show support for a local woman who allegedly destroyed magazines in the store last month.

In spite of freezing temperatures, protesters carrying cardboard signs painted with statements such as "Our death, their profit," "It worked for Bundy. Stop porn," and "Pornography — no woman's choice," circled the sidewalk in front of the Pleasant Street store, which sells primarily newspapers, magazines and greeting cards.

Heather Horak, a spokeswoman for the group, said the protesters are concerned area residents seeking to raise awareness about the harm pornography afflicts on women and children.

"We're not calling for state censorship. We're here trying to educate people," Horak said. "Pornography is the malicious destruction of women and children.

Donna Rose, manager of the Amherst Newsroom, which is owned by the Holyoke News Company, said, "We don't buy from hard-core porn distributors."

More than 100 magazines are shelved in the Newsroom under a sign prohibiting people under 18 from buying them. Titles include Playboy, Playgirl, Penthouse, and Hustler.

Rose said "We believe (the protesters) have every right to be out there. We believe in the First Amendment, and that people have the right to read what they choose."

She said she has removed magazines from the store's shelves in the past, but added, "If I start censoring a certain section because a faction disapproves, I'd end up pulling everything."

Computer service aids job hunt

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A new computer matchmaking service may not locate the man or woman of your dreams, but it could provide a shorter route to the job you've been searching for.

College JobNet, a division of National Employment Network, transforms student applications into "electronic resumes," and delivers them to prospective employers across the nation, according to founder and administrator Norman LaCroix .

LaCroix said the 17-month-old service is free to students and convenient for employers because it condenses piles of resumes into a simple computer index.

"It narrows down the selection process," LaCroix said. "If you're looking for an electrical engineer, you don't have to go through culinary arts [resumes] — you get an electrical engineer."

In order to participate, students must complete a 25-question application, which is later transformed into an electronic resume and placed on the network for 90 days, he said.

About 80 percent of all applicants are contacted by employers within the first three months, but LaCroix said the service can be renewed if the search fails.

"We're exposing students' qualifications to many more employers than they could do on their own," he said.

JobNet receives an average of 75 applications a day from students across the country, including Alaska and Hawaii, he said.

"It's increasing rapidly," he said. "We're expecting an average of 200 a day by the end of March."

Fortune 500 companies are among many JobNet subscribers, including government agencies, service organizations, national and regional associations and professional employment agencies, LaCroix said.

Subscribers pay varied fees ranging from $200 to $2,000 depending on the way they access the service, either by computer, automatic telephone, facsimile, or satellite, he said.

Clark Edwards, acting director of the University of Massachusetts Career Placement Center, said computer services may prove beneficial if used correctly.

Proposed tax in question

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

A proposal to tax University of Massachusetts students $50 is not likely to become reality this year, the town's finance director said recently.

Nancy Maglione, who suggested the controversial revenue-raiser last semester, said pushing it through Town Meeting and the state legislature "would just be too time consuming at this point."

"Now I don't rule it out," she said. "But it's not likely. There isn't sufficient time to get it together."

The proposal is one of several local option taxes brewing in town hall, some of which will have to be adopted if the town is to avoid fiscal disaster in the 1990s, Maglione said. Other options include increasing sales and entertainment taxes, she said.

"I think it's appropriate for students to be paying for a part of the services rendered to them," Maglione said of the tax proposal, which will remain on the back burner.

"Our point is that students are residents of this community for nine months — they vote here and are part of our government," she said.

Under the governor's latest recommendation, Amherst stands to gain $500,000 more than it expected in local assistance for next fiscal year. The increase, however, is tied to the new tax package facing the legislature.

"It's good news for the town if the legislature approves it," Maglione said.

Even with the extra revenue, town administrators agree, Amherst will face referendums next year to override Proposition 2 1/2, the state law that limits property taxes. Town Manager Barry Delcastilho said, "The question now is how much of an override."

The two candidates for the two opening seats on the board of selectmen both said taxing students is unfair. But Frederick Rice, a former planning board member looking to fill Selectman Allen Torrey's slot, said the proposal will need to be looked at and possibly used as a last resort.

"I certainly hope the town can survive without going to the University for funds," Rice said. Rice, along with most town officials, contend that the state formula for local aid ignores the fact that students reside in Amherst nine months a year.

Local union challenges Stop & Shop

By PETER LUCHT
Collegian Staff

The loss of local jobs in the construction of Stop & Shop supermarkets is the issue of a leafletting campaign the past several Saturdays in Massachusetts and Connecticut by the United Brotherhood of Carpenters.

Carpenters have been distributing leaflets every Saturday at the more than 50 Stop & Shop supermarkets in Massachusetts, including the Hadley store, and eight in Connecticut, discouraging shoppers from patronizing Stop & Shop because of its alleged use of out-of-state non-union labor in the construction of its stores.

"We want to make the public realize that Stop & Shop is being unfair. They are not giving the same people who patronize the stores the opportunity to help build them," said Simon James, an organizer for the UBC Local 108 in Springfield.

James said Stop & Shop is breaking a legal contract made with the UBC in 1982 to use only local union help by accepting bids from contractors who bring in non-union workers from out of state and possibly Canada.

"We are regarding this as more of a local issue than a union one. We want them to use union carpenters, but the most disturbing thing is they are using out-of-state workers," James said.

William Baughn, vice-president of labor relations for Stop & Shop, said, "This is not a union issue. We are a very unionized company. We must be able to build our stores competitively. As far as I know, they want a commitment that whenever we build a store we'll use union help. We can't do that and be competitive."

James said a legal agreement between the company's head of construction and the union was signed in 1982. He said the contract stipulated Stop & Shop would use at least two-thirds local labor in the construction of its stores. James says the local carpenters are being brought in now only to do the finishing work in the stores, detailing the interiors after the majority of the work has been completed. A store being constructed in Springfield, now about 90 percent complete, acted as a catalyst for the present leafletting campaign, said James.

Baughn said the legality of the contract is in question, and lawyers are in the process of investigating whether it is binding, and if so, to whom. He said several leafletting campaigns have occurred since early November, but the question of a contract violation has only been formally discussed in the past five weeks or so. "As soon as we know where we stand we'll tell them," Baughn said.

Baughn said the union gave him a new contract to sign at a meeting Jan. 17 that stipulates the use of only union help by Stop & Shop, while at the same time pushing for the recognition of the contract now at issue.

"We said we had to be able, on a case by case basis, to take bids. If the union is not being competitive, we have to find out why," Baughn said.

James said Stop & Shop is trying to pretend the contract does not exist. "Stop & Shop says they're looking into it. That doesn't hold water with us."

Stop & Shop Vice-President of Public Affairs Aileen Gorman, said the key issue is one of competition. "One thing we insist on is a competitive company. We are not even sure why the union is doing this. We welcome their bidding, they are more than welcome to bid. In order to run competitively we must build competitively, whether that be union or non-union. Stop & Shop is a good union company."

Every employee of Stop & Shop is required to join a union, the United Food and Commercial Workers.

James said that area standards of pay and benefits must be met by the contractors doing the store construction for the union carpenters to be competitive. Union carpenters train as apprentices for four years at $7 per hour, until they become journeyman, making $17.25 per hour. James said the union offers health insurance and a pension, as well as the training. He said it is easy for contractors to undercut the union if they want to.

"You can always get somebody to work for $5 per hour," James said.

James said the leafletting will continue on Saturdays until an agreement is reached with the supermarket chain.

Horak said pornography subordinates, humiliates, and degrades women. A direct connection between pornography and violence against women exists, she said.

"If pornography didn't exist, violent attacks against women would decrease," she said.

This is the second time in recent weeks the Newsroom has been a sight of a protest. In early January, Sandy Goodman, 28, of Northampton, was arrested for defacing magazines at the store.

Goodman was charged with malicious destruction of property over $250 and pleaded not guilty. A pre-trial date has been set for Feb. 16.

Goodman would not comment on the charges last Friday, but said, "The protest is not about sex being dirty; it's much more about violence against women."

One activist traveled from Cambridge to join the protest. Three men took part in the demonstration.

Two police officers were present, but no arrests were made.

Horak said the group has planned more pickets at the Amherst Newsroom, and at other local stores that sell what the protestors consider pornography.

■ proposed tax

"If the state counted students like real people like they ought to do, it would solve Amherst's fiscal woes," Rice said. "But I don't think that's going to happen."

Selectman Judy Brooks, who is running for re-election in April, said students already face a heavy tax burden with increased fees in recent years. A municipal tax would put some students with tight budgets over the edge, she said.

Both candidates said an ongoing dialogue between the town and the University is essential during tough fiscal times.

"Especially when money is tight, people need to talk to each other," Rice said.

Political magazine gains clout

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

The Five-College International Forum is finally getting the respect it deserves.

Yoav Shorr, editor in chief of the biannual magazine of political issues, said area faculty are submitting more contributions for the third issue than for either of the previous two.

"Now that we exist, (the faculty) is taking us more seriously," he said. The forum premiered last spring.

Shorr, a senior political science major at the University of Massachusetts, said last year's fall and spring issues each received 20 contributions.

The magazine's editorial board consists of students from the each of the five colleges: Shorr, Patrick Maseau and Gregory Porter of the University; Karen L. McSharry, Naomi J. Mobed and Daniela Witte of Mount Holyoke College; Je Un Kim and Eleanor M. Rusling of Smith College; John B. Hanshaw of Amherst College; and Peter D. Mamacos of Hampshire College.

Contributions to the "non-partisan" magazine run between 3,000 and 6,000 words and consist of "in-depth analysis of global issues," Shorr said. Porter, a senior history major, said the editors do not want to publish papers that merely express a point of view, particularly papers submitted for a course.

The first issue had no specific focus: feminism, Korean reunification and U.S./Haitian relations were part of the potpourri of issues addressed. By the fall, submissions were a little more homogenous, and the forum was given the theme "United States Foreign Policy Into The 1990s." Essays covered U.S. relations with Latin America, the Soviet Union and Europe.

The editors have not chosen a theme for the spring, 1989 issue, which Shorr said will probably come out in May. One possible topic is "Current Challenges in

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writers or boards and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University. Opinions are invited.

Mr. Bush, who are you?

Dear Mr. President,

First off, let me say that I voted for Dukakis in November — mainly because I didn't want to see you in the White House. On election day I held out until the very last second, hoping, wishing for a miracle, and a Democratic victory.

Mr. Bush, I have to admit, I was rather upset that you won the election. My greatest fear was that you would be another Ronald Reagan.

Bob Bobala

However, on the day you were sworn in, I saw you standing there in the cold with your nose running and with the wind messing up your hair, and the first reason that you are different from Ronald Reagan occurred to me: Mr. Bush, you are human. Now, we both know that Reagan is not human. He always seemed to have some kind of mythical aura around him. No matter what he did he came out smelling like a rose. Not only did he survive a scandal like the Iran-Contra affair, but he left office with an unprecedented popularity rating. No mere human being could have done that.

But George, you are not Ronald Reagan — and I'm glad. Maybe it's just because I'm still caught up in the optimism of Inauguration Day, but so far, your style and your actions since the election have proven that you are different from that alien that used to be our president.

For example, right after the election you began to establish a different relationship with the press. There will be no need for Brit Hume to follow in Sam Donaldson's footsteps as ABC's fierce, almost manic, White House correspondent. There will be no more shouted questions which could get only a grin and a shrug from President Reagan. You have signaled to the press that you're willing to answer questions. Plus, you've been doing your homework, so you're not afraid to be confronted by the press.

In your first week in office you called an impromptu press conference at 11:00 in the morning and talked to reporters for 43 minutes. Compare that to the strict 30-minute time limit which Reagan imposed on his infrequent and prime-time news conferences.

What else did you do during you're first week in office? You stressed ethics. No more Meeses, or Watts, or Deavers. You've been trying to tell the country that there will be no "sleaze-factor" in your administration .... Well, George, I at least give you credit for wishful thinking.

Then there is the personality of you and your family. You have replaced the glitz and formality of Ronald Reagan with your easygoing and casual mannerisms. And while Reagan could only talk about family values, you have a couple thousand grandchildren crawling all over the White House. Oh, and as far as I've heard, Mrs. Bush isn't into astrology. Bravo!

Yes, Mr. President, my greatest fear for your administration has been put to rest: you are not Ronald Reagan.

But, George, what I want to know now is: who are you?! Is this the real George Bush that we're seeing now, or are you just going through another phase in your character development? A year ago you were "The Wimp"— the man who had no mind of his own, who could not survive outside of Ronald Reagan's shadow. Four months ago you were "The Bully"— the man who picked on little Michael Dukakis, ranting and raving about the ACLU and Boston Harbor.

But now, you're just "Happy George"— simply a good Joe who happens to be president of the United States. Will the true George Bush please stand up? . . . On second thought Mr. President, don't. Even if after three months I hate your guts, a split-personality would make for an interesting four years.

Bob Bobala is a Collegian columnist

Are the recent budget cuts are making a wreck out of your acedemic experience?

Is this the seventh semester you haven't gotten any classes in your major?

New Hampshire thanks you, Mikey

Dear Gov. Dukakis,

I wanted to talk to you about this in person, and I thought that I spotted you swimming around the Campus Pond the other day, but then I realized that it was just one of your other mallard relatives. So now I feel obliged to have to write this to you.

Jim Clark

Anyway, since you know nothing about me, allow me to briefly introduce myself. I am a second semester junior at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst (do you remember where that is? After all it is outside of Route 128, but it's pretty close to the Quabbin Reservoir, the one that provides you with your drinking water in Brookline) and, to tell you the truth, I'm pretty upset with your recent ax-murdering of the state budget.

I don't know if you understand this, Mikey, whereas you haven't had to stand in an add-drop line at a public institution in this state recently. But your cuts have really affected the quality of education that the Commonwealth is capable of offering to the students.

This being my sixth semester here at UMass, and having been a regular victim of the word 'oversubscribed,' I am quite seasoned in the rigors of the dreaded add-drop period. Believe me, Duke, having to scramble around like wild geese (another of your feathered friends, just to keep things in easy-to-understand terminology) to get enough classes to be a full-time student is not a very productive way to make a life.

Now I am aware that sometimes you have to trim off a little fat, but I hardly believe that the future of our nation, now in the hands of the college generation and its ability to gain further knowledge, is what can be called 'excess.'

And I'm sure that those 2,100 tax-paying General Motors employees were thrilled to death when they found out that their jobs will be terminated when the plant in Framingham closes later this year. Just another sign of your commitment to the betterment of big business. Do I believe in miracles? Yeh, right.

What this state really needs is some new ways to generate revenue. You had the right idea when you imposed the infamous 'sin taxes' on those staples of the evil and wicked, booze and butts. But if you really want to go the whole nine yards, why don't you take the toll booths off the Mass Pike and move them up to Route 93 and 495 near the New Hampshire border. Traffic in that direction is sure to pick up in the near future.

Of course, maybe they can't afford to go the haven of tax-free New Hampshire. After all, that new gasoline tax increase will help to keep more families at home on the weekends. Not to mention the people who have to commute an hour to work every day. Believe it or not Mikey, but not everyone in this state can just hop on the MBTA and ride to work every morning.

Well, enough bashing. I hope you take my suggestions about education into consideration. As a college student and state resident, I'm as concerned about the plights of others in a similar pickle as I am for myself. I've pretty much resigned myself to believing that I'll still be an undergraduate here well into the next generation. But it's time someone stuck up for the fate of the poor college student.

But hey, Mikey, if you ever are in the area, feel free to stop by so we can chat in person. I'm sure I won't be doing anything during the day for the next four months.

Sincerely,

Jim Clark, a Collegian columnist and frustrated student who now has a grand total of nine credits this semester.

P.S. You actually thought you would make a good president? BAA! HAA! HAA! That's a good one, Mikey.

Student Judiciary backs Sanchez and White

After carefully considering the events that led up to the consent decree in the Silkoff/Rabinowitz case, we, as members of the Student Supreme Court, have concluded that Justice John Sanchez and Assistant Clerk of Courts Kathy White acted responsibly and in the best interests of the student body, the Student Government Association, and the Student Judiciary. Their actions were not undertaken unilaterally, but with the majority support and knowledge of the Judiciary.

We have carefully considered and researched the motions submitted by Justice Thomas Ralph. Ralph is acting solely on his own behalf and is not acting in the interest of the Court. Therefore, we do not support his actions. While we respect his right to his own opinions and his right to pursue this case, we firmly believe that his views lack the perspective that the possible repercussions of this case warrant. Without passing judgment on the original case and on the advice of legal counsel, it was in the best interest of the SGA to agree to the afore mentioned settlement.

Due to the nature of this case as a whole, the SGA is in a precarious position. By signing the consent decree, Sanchez and White have made possible the restoration of normal SGA operations. Whereas Sanchez and White have minimized losses to the SGA and the Student Activities Trust Fund, even a successful disposition of Justice Ralph's motion would increase the potential liability to the SGA and the students ten-fold.

We do not support Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz's actions. However, there can be no question that the damage to the SGA and the SATF was significantly reduced as a result of the consent decree. Procedural irregularities must be addressed and corrected to prevent such situations from happening again. The loss of substantial student funds, through defending a civil rights lawsuit — the average cost of which is upwards of $50,000 — however, are unrecoverable.

U-Joint audience get the bug for Dinosaur jr.

By JASON TALERMAN

Marshall power. It's a fine thing, in the right hands, professionals, time tested and true, money made and earned for the careful manipulation of good, clean tube power. Dinosaur jr.'s J. Mascis and the newly spawned Bill Janovitz of Buffalo Tom, straight from Marshall amp products via SST records have been sent to feel the power and interpret the word. The two bands tipped off the UMass rock season with 300 combined watts of Marshall excitement Friday night at Universal Joint in Northamton. Gidget Goes to Hell was also on the bill and I have a long list of jokes about their set and general presence but suffice to say, the only purposed they served for me was to alert my friends milling around outside that bigger and better things were about to happen.

Buffalo Tom, playing songs mainly from their upcoming Mascis produced LP showed exactly why all you have to do to be a success upon graduating college is watch morning TV and write hard rock songs. Dinosaur jr.'s raw power might lie in their ability to abandon tightness from time to time but Buffalo Tom find a nice niche in between loud and tight. In a time where every little punk freak can afford heavy duty electronics, it's good to know that bands like Buffalo Tom can handle the equipment with respect. A genuine reverence for guitar power. Listening to the radio you might think that Dinosaur jr. is about ready to assume their rightful position as ministers of hard rock to the middle America. Maybe, deep inside, they know that corruption and compromise are inevitable in the world of commercial success because their live shows will simply never translate to the box seat crowd in places like Kemper Arena, Kansas, cap. 13,000. Mascis is gifted at the art of digression. He has a suitcase of effects and switches that serve to defy the concept of continuity. He becomes gripped by the Marshalls, as do we all. He writhes, buckles and then finds his ways to the pedals and a 75 decible increase in volume. The skin tingles, the record scouts become confused. Dinosaur jr. is wealthy but proud.

Swim teams drench New Hampshire

• Minutemen blow Wildcats out of water

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team entered the final leg of its run towards the New England Championships with a bang as it trounced an undermanned New Hampshire squad 169-55 at Boyden Pool Saturday.

This was the last meet for a number of swimmers who didn't qualify for the New Englands and they made the best of it as they led UMass to wins in all but one event. The meet went pretty much as expected by UMass coach Russ Yarworth.

"Some guys swam well and some didn't," Yarworth said.

"Some guys were just getting used to the tapering we've started [for the New Englands]. I was pleased with the kids that shaved."

UNH knew right away that there wasn't going to be an upset in Amherst when the Minutemen swept the first two events. In the 200-yard medley relay all three UMass teams took early leads and made it a race among themselves. In the 500 freestyle Mike Melanson led the Minutemen with teammates Will Riddell following in second and Scott Milbert in third.

In the 100 freestyle UMass took first and second. Brian McIver took top honors in that event followed by Roger Kennedy in the number two spot. Frank Sampson won the 200 individual medley soon after.

The Minuteman divers were really on Saturday as they pulled off a rare sweep of the one-meter competition. Dan Chesnicka grabbed his habitual first while getting great support from Dave Wells and Steve Myers, who stole second and third, respectively.

In the three-meter event Chesnicka lodged another win and Wells repeated in second.

Back in the pool, G.T. Ladd and Sean Rutherford raked in the top two spots in the 100 butterfly followed by a UMass sweep of the 50 freestyle with Jim Robertson taking first, Evan Gwilliam second and Peter Reich third.

The 100 backstroke was the Minutemen's worst showing of the day as they managed only a second place finish from Dave Ehle. UMass quickly atoned for the slip however as Melanson and Chris Sullivan grabbed first and second, respectively in the 200 freestyle and Peter Koback and John 'Chico' Gardiner did the same in the 100 breaststroke. To add some consistency to the meet UMass finished with yet another 1-2 combination in the final event, the 800 freestyle, with the team of Robertson, Reich, Kennedy and McIver winning it.

Women's gymnastics slips away from Yale

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

On a Saturday afternoon at Yale University, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team learned two things.

In eking out a slim victory, the Minutewomen proved themselves capable of winning the close ones. And second, they are going to have to shore up their act a bit if they wish to beat powerhouse University of New Hampshire this upcoming weekend.

The Minutewomen stumbled on the balance beam and struggled again off the vault, before regrouping in the floor exercise to nose out their hosts 175.15 to 173.9. The win improved UMass to a perfect 4-0 on the season, while Yale dropped to 1-2.

Coach Alfie Mitchell had predicted that his squad would approach the 180-point barrier entering the meet, but was left to count his blessings when the team score came up short. "Our goals were to win, and come up with 180," said Mitchell.

"We didn't do what we set out to do. Hopefully it will help us to get in gear at practice this week. UNH is the toughest squad we will face until the Atlantic 10 meet (post-season).

"But we did prove we can come back," he continued, "up until this point we really hadn't been in a good scrap."

Entering the floor exercise — the final event of the competition — UMass led by a mere nine-tenths of a point. But behind the efforts of Kim Grady (personal best 9.4) and Erin Klier (9.3), and despite the 9.6 turned in by Yale star Tracey Lassin, the Minutewomen outscored Yale 45.6 to 45.25 to preserve the win. The score was UMass' highest in the floor exercise this season.

For the second consecutive Saturday Grady led all scorers while erasing her own career high score, chipping in 36.6 all-around points. Erika Baxter added 34.9 points, the third highest total of the afternoon, and Erin Klier tallied 34.55, good for fourth place.

In addition to her record in the 1000-yard freestyle, Young showed her stamina for distance swimming by taking the 500-yard freestyle. Leary had a tiring day by winning first in the 50, 100, and 200 yard freestyle event. Melissa Waller finished the day with a first place in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke, and Regina Jungbluth came in second to Waller in both races.

The UMass women swept all three placings in the 200-yard butterfly with Sue Gorski taking first in 2:13:88. Lori Carroll, who took second in the 200, was able to edge out Gorski in the 100 yard butterfly. Debbie Mullen dived superbly all day to win both the 1-meter and 3-meter diving competition.

Newcomb said when they do get the chance to rest before the New England, Eastern, and ECAC meets, they will swim that much faster. "People in New England will realize just how good we really are," he said.

• Women put forth another record showing

By DEBORAH PICARDI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team, in one of its best performances of the year, swam past the University of New Hampshire Saturday by almost 70 points, 184-116. The Minutewomen totally dominated the UNH swimmers, winning all but two events, and setting three new UMass records.

"Our whole group has come together. The most important thing is that we haven't rested yet this year, but we're still swimming fast," UMass coach Bob Newcomb said.

Freshman Tracy Young set a UMass and pool record in the 1000-yard freestyle. Michelle Leary lowered her own record in the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 22:61 seconds. The 400-yard free relay team of Michelle Leary, Megan McCamy, Kim Morin and Patty Pike set a pool record with a time of 3:42:55.

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team finds itself preparing for an up-hill battle, literally and figuratively. A half-mile up-hill to be exact.

On the top of the hill, overlooking Worcester awaits UMass' next opponent— Holy Cross College. But, like the ascending climb to the Hart Center the Minutemen must battle for A) a road victory, and B) its last non-Atlantic 10 game.

The slumping Crusaders started the season 6-0 before losing nine of their last 13 games but, like the Minutemen, Holy Cross can be dangerous in its own gymnasium (6-3 at home). Which is exactly why UMass head coach John Calipari is taking the Crusaders very seriously.

"It's important in that it's a game we can win, and we have to go after it that way," Calipari said.

And, as the last game before UMass' dizzying, hectic dash of Atlantic 10 games in the next six weeks before the all-important tournament seeding, Holy Cross is a perfect place for UMass to assemble a road-win mentality. The Crusaders are a great match-up for the Minutemen — Holy Cross has a comparable line-up to UMass, and the top assist man in the nation, Glenn Willams (9.9 per game).

"We're not going to change anything for him. We worry about our own team and if we're doing what we're supposed to, then we're going to have a chance to win," Calipari said.

Hoop Du-jour: Junior college transfer George Hardin, is eligble to play tonight and will be suited up for the game.

Men gymnasts tumble at Cortland

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

If only the NCAA had the National Football League's instant replay rule. Then maybe University of Massachusetts gymnastics coach Roy Johnson could have pleaded his case on Saturday.

The Minutemen, 2-2, were stunned 257.1-253.1 by Cortland State University in a meet where Johnson felt inconsistent judging played a big part in the outcome.

One such instance came in the pommel horse where Ricki Daniels, a disabled athlete, performed. Daniels, who was born with unusally small legs and who came into Boyden Gym last year in a wheelchair, won the event with a 9.3.

But according to Johnson, that score was not even in the ballpark. Johnson felt the judges scored with their hearts rather than by the book. UMass was not so fortunate.

"I really thought we should have won horse," Johnson said. "I think the judges were pretty low on our scores."

An error by the judges in the vault also helped to do in the Minutemen as sophomore Dave Dinucci was awarded an 8.95 for a vault which should have merited a higher score.

"He did an outstanding vault that should have won the meet but the judges admitted they made a mistake," Johnson said. "We didn't make a protest because we only had one left because the judging was so erratic."

Cortland's Greg Curtis, who was the all-around winner of the day, won the vault with a 9.1.

But through all this, Johnson gave credit to Cortland and pointed out that his team did not have its best day. UMass was still in this meet going into the high bar, the last event of the afternoon, but the Minutemen couldn't come through down the stretch.

"They (Cortland) just had a real excellent day and they looked real good," Johnson said. "We had some excellent performances but we had some performances that we were counting on, that just didn't happen. We had three really poor performances (on high bar) that cost us the meet."

Cortland combined for a team score of 43.5 on the high bar to easily swing past the Minutemen, who hit just a 40.75. Curtis edged UMass co-captain John Eggers on the high bar 9.1-9.05 for first place.

One excellent performance for the Minutemen came from Carl Russ on the still rings. Russ took the only first place of the six events on the afternoon for the Minutemen by hitting a 9.25 just ahead of teammate Eggers, who was second with 9.2.

One good sign of the meet for UMass was the parallel bars where Johnson felt the Minutemen were a little weak at the beginning of the season. But on Saturday, senior co-captain Bart Balocki and senior Tim Myers turned in big performances on the parallels to help UMass outscore Cortland 43.05-42.45 and give UMass a chance to pull out the win going into the last event.

Balocki's 8.9 took third place for UMass while Myers, who was also high man on the afternoon in the all-around competition for UMass with a 51.35 for second behind Curtis, hit a 9.0 just behind Curtis' 9.1 for second place on the parallels.

Justice quits over deal

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Student Justice Tom Ralph resigned yesterday, claiming the judiciary is "making a grave mistake" by choosing to uphold an out-of-court agreement recognizing Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as Student Government Association co-presidents.

The consent decree was signed Dec. 16 by justices John Sanchez and Kathy White in agreement with Silkoff and Rabinowitz and drops all injunctions barring the pair from taking office, ending a nearly year-long debate.

In his letter of resignation Ralph said he may pursue legal action, both through the University and the courts, to prevent Silkoff and Rabinowitz from assuming office as SGA co-presidents.

Ralph contends that previous student judiciary decisions rendering SGA co-presidencies unconstitutional are being ignored and the judiciary is now overstepping its bounds by recognizing the pair without senate ratification.

"My top priority is insuring that the whole constitution we're governed by does not fall apart," he said. "The senate must be allowed to maintain its authority."

Ralph also questioned the validity of the document, claiming he was not notified of the court date and neither he nor a majority of the student judiciary agreed to "this ludicrous agreement."

But, SGA clerk of courts Chris McClellan said the majority of the justices now agree that it will be most beneficial to the students if Silkoff and Rabinowitz take office.

McClellan said every justice had knowledge of the impending case and the reason Ralph was not notified of the court date was that he was gone during January and did not leave word where he could be reached.

Justices Kathy White and John Sanchez, who both signed the consent decree, said the judiciary had little choice but to concede to the agreement because of mounting court costs, the University's refusal to provide legal counsel, and a mere 10 days notice given to prepare their case.

"We were placed in a difficult position," said White. "The stakes are much higher in Hampshire Superior Court than they are in the SGA."

"It's a matter of what's best for everyone involved," she said. "I think John and my signing that was best for the SGA and the students."

It is not yet clear whether senate ratification is necessary to install Silkoff and Rabinowitz as co-presidents, but McClellan said the SGA is seeking legal counsel to determine the correct route to take.

McClellan said the role of the judiciary in the controversy is over, and the justices will immediately move on to other issues, including training, self-education, and working to tighten some of the loopholes in the SGA constitution.

"More attention should be devoted to heading off these problems by strengthening the constitution," he said. "If we work at strengthening the organization as a whole, we won't have a need to go outside the systems of the SGA."

Minuteman faces charge

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Anti-gay references in the Minuteman have prompted a campus gay rights activist to file harassment charges with the Dean of Students Office against the conservative newspaper's staff.

Former Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance President Jay Festa said he filed harassment charges last week against the staff of the Minuteman as listed in the paper.

A "diversity word find" that appears on the parody page in last week's Minuteman spells out "Festa" near the words "homo" and "dead." The paper also contains a photograph of Festa and other Student Government Association members under the label "queers." The December issue contained further "innuendo," said Festa.

Minuteman Editor in Chief Jay Schoendorf, who confirmed charges have been filed, said, "It is clearly under 'parody' and it is humor. People who took that seriously had better rethink themselves."

"We placed it under parody for a specific reason, if we'd placed it up front then they'd have a legitimate gripe," he said.

Schoendorf said he was not surprised by the charges. "It has happened before, it is the typical liberal response to our paper," he said. "We are a newspaper and protected by First Amendment rights. We have not slandered him. We'll just go through the motions again."

"That's a very opportunistic (interpretation) of the First Amendment," said Festa, who is president of the Commuter Area Government. "It (the word search) is a threat. It's not humorous, it's threatening and intimidating."

The Minuteman appears to be taking a more aggressive anti-gay stance in its two most recent publications, a reflection of both the personal values of its editors and the bitter political divisions that have plagued the SGA, he said.

"It's definitely political," Festa said. "(The Commuter Area Government) is a very large power base for somebody they hate to have control of. I'm left, and they look for whatever ammunition they have against us."

The newspaper has traditionally voiced anti-gay sentiments in keeping with the ideology of the local conservative community and the national Republican Party, Schoendorf said. "The University of Massachusetts is really the only place that I know of where homosexuality is accepted, from the administration on down."

"But we have the truth on our side, and it's our responsibility to present the facts," he said.

SAT fails test in court

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Last Friday, a federal judge ruled that the awarding of state-sponsored merit scholarships solely on the basis of the Scholastic Aptitude Test is unfairly biased against females. Only two states use these scores exclusively: New York and Massachusetts.

Terry Zoulas, public relations director of the Massachusetts Board of Regents, said the state awards $84 million in scholarships annually, $600,000 of which (0.7 percent) is awarded on the basis of SAT scores through the Senatorial Honors Program. The rest of the money, Zoulas said, is given on the basis of financial need. The board oversees the awarding of these scholarships.

"We knew (the selection process) was wrong from the inception," he said. "We're looking to get rid of it. It's been going on for years."

Judge John M. Walker's decision last Friday was the first to call the SATs discriminatory, according to the New York Times. The exam, usually taken by college-bound high school juniors, has also been criticized for inaccurately reflecting the aptitudes of racial minorities.

Arlene Avakian, a lecturer in the University of Massachusetts Women's Studies department, said that while males score higher on the SATs, females generally get better grades in high school.

"I'm glad to see that a test like that is labelled as discriminatory," she said. "Word problems (on the SATs) relate more to a male experience as opposed to a female experience."

Ronald Hambleton, a University professor of education, is researching how accurately the controversial test determines the range of a student's knowledge. Hambleton said high school grades are an equally unreliable basis for judgement because the grade a student receives at a given high school depends on the quality

Fresh face for PVTA garage

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Correspondent

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority yesterday celebrated the completion of its $2.3 million expansion and renovation of the University of Massachusetts Transit Facility with a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the new garage.

"This project will mean improved vehicle maintenance and performance, a better environment for drivers and personnel, and increased efficiency of the system overall," said Robert D. Manz, PVTA administrator.

The initial building, completed in the spring of 1979, was designed to hold 30-foot buses, according to UMass Transit Service Operations Manager Al Byam. "Now most of the buses are 35 and 40 feet long. To keep maintenance costs low, it's necessary to house the vehicles inside."

In 1986, the UMass Transit Authority secured the federal grants necessary to expand the existing facility, through the efforts of US Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield.

"Conte has been instrumental in the birth and the growth of the UMass Transit Service," said Manz.

Federal grants provided 80 percent of the funding, with the remaining 20 percent provided by state grants and student fees, Manz said. Because the funding was obtained three years ago, the project was not affected by the recent budget cuts, he said.

Conte, who flew from Washington D.C. to attend the ceremony, said he was enthusiastic about the new garage. "I wanted to invite members of the Bush administra-

Madson supports education proposal

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson heartily endorses Senator Paul Tsongas' plan to make Massachusetts public higher education the best in the country by the year 2,000, he said yesterday.

Tsongas, recently named chairman of the Board of Regents of Higher Education, proposed an eight-point plan Feb. 1 which called for greater involvement of the public and the state's business community.

"I've been a fan of Tsongas for a long, long time and I have a high respect for his intellect," Madson said. "This plan is the spotlight we need on Massachusetts higher education and we can benefit from his leadership."

Since the plan relies heavily on the business community, Tsongas chose to unveil his ideas at a breakfast meeting with the Massachusetts High Technology Council, a group vehemently opposed to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis's $735 million tax package.

Both Tsongas and Madson agree that a major problem to overcome lies in the public perception of the public higher education system and its competitiveness with private institutions.

"We have to say and believe, for example, that UMass-Amherst can compete with Harvard, and U Lowell can compete with MIT," Tsongas said.

Madson had similar sentiments. "Our biggest concern is how to get out the message out to families, students and legislators about the need for comprehensive public higher education," he said. Madson said that would depend on grassroots support for Tsongas' plans.

Tsongas urged that Massachusetts relieve itself of the "mind set" which considers public institutions to be "riding the economy section" as opposed to first-class.

Among Tsongas' recommendations is a system of "interlocking directorships" in which chief executive officers of leading Massachusetts firms serve on the boards of trustees of state colleges and universities, with college presidents serving on the boards of directors of the companies.

"I am seeking to take the talent, expertise an skills that exist in corporate Massachusetts and link them into the public higher education system," he said.

Other recommendations Tsongas made to the council include:

- Open access to public higher education while maintaining academic quality.
- More involvement by public higher education in the community, particularly in public school systems.
- Establishment of an academic review panel to screen potential appointments to college boards of trustees.
- Declaring public higher education to be a "political-free zone," immune from political interferance.
- Endorsing the use of performance-based evaluation as one of the criteria in determining the level of state funding for public institutions.
- Strengthening the role of alumni of the state colleges and universities in fund-raising and participation.

Tsongas said his proposals are long-range goals that should be considered irrespective of the financial problems now being faced by state colleges and universities.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said that, although some of the ideas in Tsongas' plan were controversial, it was bold of him to put them forward.

Fraternities and sorerities rush into the new semester.

Greeks win fans with fair

By SCOTT KAUFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Efforts to dispel the "Animal House" image that often plagues fraternities and sororities drew more than 100 people to the Student Union Ballroom yesterday for the first-annual Greek fair.

The twelve fraternities and eight sororities on campus each sponsored information tables, providing material on housing, meals, rush procedures, and other aspects of Greek life.

Michael Kearney, a brother at Pi Kappa Alpha, said he hopes the fair will eliminate stereotypes surrounding the Greek Area.

"Fraternities help the community a great deal through blood drives, toys for tots, campus beautification projects and numerous other philanthropic activities," Kearney said. "Unfortunately, many people stereotype fraternities as sexist, discriminatory, and athletically-oriented, which is entirely untrue."

Sophomore Marge Santos said attending the fair changed her views about sororities, and she is considering rushing this semester.

"I always thought sororities were a bunch of stuck-up girls," Santos said. "But I see they are just like me in many ways."

Alex Mojhanson said,"I probably won't rush but I am thinking the living arrangements and the social life would be better."

"The frats have always, in my mind, been wild partyers but I am coming to realize that is not the case," he said.

Sororities tend to follow more formal procedures for inducting members than fraternities, said Kelly Mills of Sigma Kappa. Several sororities conduct formal interviews and most have elaborate rush gatherings, she said.

Each fraternity and sorority will hold an open house this week to help rushees find the chapter that best meets their needs, said Brian Howard of Pi Kappa Alpha.

About 250 people are expected to participate in rush week, but less than half will be invited to join the 1,100 member system, Howard said.

of education offered there.

"On the average," he said, "females are less likely to take advanced-level math courses than males."

Still, Hambleton agreed that the scholarship selection process is discriminatory and said that the state is putting together its own aptitude test.

Said Hambleton: "How can you have any procedure that gives 80 percent of its awards to males?"

George Urch, associate dean of the University's School of Education, said "the exam is a poor indicator of a lot of things." Urch said standardized examinations like the SATs and the Graduate Record Examination not reflect six important aspects of the student's total knowledge: perseverance, motivation, effort, confidence, leadership and how the student assumes responsibility.

According to the National Education Asociation 1989 Almanac of Higher Education, the average SAT scores of female college-bound seniors was 422, verbal, 453, math while the average male scores were 435, verbal, 498, math.

Hambleton said the tests are geographically inaccurate as well. Massachusetts, he said, is ranked 39th in the nation for SAT scores. However, 60 to 70 percent of this state's high school students take the exam. In states like Alabama, where only two percent of the students take the exam, there is less competition, he said.

While questions arise as to the validity of awarding the scholarships, Associate Dean of Admissions Kathy Reinhart said "academic record has the top priority" in the University's applicant selection process. "We look at a lot more than that, though."

Zoulas said the state plans to award scholarships on the basis of more aspects of a student's high school education: class rank, grades and extracurricular activities will all be considered for the program.

"You don't give merit awards on the basis of a single test," he said. "It's educationally unsound."

Assaults send two to Health Services

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Two male University of Massachusetts students were taken to University Health Services over the weekend for treatment of facial injuries received during an assault, police said.

One student, a 20-year-old, was reportedly hit in the face by a 6'3" man sometime before 2 a.m. Saturday in the parking lot of Old Amherst Creamery at the intersection of Fearing Street and Sunset Avenue, police said. He was treated at Health Services for a fractured nose and a possible eye injury.

The second man injured on Sunday night told police he was walking through the Brittany Manor apartments complex when he was invited to a party in one of the apartments by a woman inside. Once inside, the victim said he was punched in the face by a 6'3" man. He was treated at UMass for a broken nose, police said.

In other police reports:

- University of Massachusetts police were dispatched to the Southwest Horseshoe Friday to investigate the report of three males damaging a vehicle parked there, police said. With the aid of student security and a witness, police were able to identify two of the men who will be summoned to court for a show cause hearing for the $1,000 damage done to the car.
- An 18-year-old Westwood man was arrested Friday and is expected to be charged with being a minor in possession of alcohol Friday, police said.
- State police in Shelburne arrested a 27-year-old Northampton man on an outstanding UMass police warrant Saturday, police said.
- A tow truck operator reported Saturday he accidentally broke a car's window while gaining access to the car he was attempting to tow. The car sustained about $200 in damages, police said.
- An 18-year-old Byfield man was arrested at John Adams Residence Hall Saturday. He is expected to be charged with being a minor in possession of alcohol, police said.
- A car parked in E Lot was reported broken into Saturday and a stereo stolen from it. The car received $500 in damages, police said.

- Two 18-year-old men were arrested on Fearing Street Saturday. They are expected to be charged with being minors in possession of alcohol, police said.
- A 21-year-old Southbridge man was arrested Saturday after police brought his car to a stop on University Drive. He is expected to be charged with driving under the influence of alcohol. He was also driving an unregistered, uninsured vehicle, police said.
- A license plate was reported stolen from a vehicle parked in Lot 62 Sunday, police said.
- A video cassette recorder worth $125 was reported stolen from the Student Area Government office in Field Residence Hall Sunday, police said.

Teen pleads innocent to shotgun murder

GREENFIELD (AP) — A teen-ager pleaded innocent yesterday to charges stemming from the shotgun death of his girlfriend, the third apparent slaying of a woman in the town of Turners Falls in 18 months.

Joseph R. Demers Jr., 18, was arraigned in Greenfield District Court in connection with the slaying of Catherine E. Gochinski, 16, who was killed with Demers' shotgun just before midnight Friday in the Turners Falls apartment they shared.

Judge Allan McGuane continued the case to March 7 and ordered Demers held without bail at Bridgewater State Hospital for evaluation for competency and criminal responsibility, according to W. Michael Goggins, the assistant district attorney handling the case.

The courtroom was packed with observers, many dressed in black. When the hearing ended, one man burst into tears and was led from the room by serveral other men.

Attorney claims client was abused

SPRINGFIELD (AP)— A prosecutor maintained yesterday that a woman lured her husband to an isolated boat ramp where he was ambushed and beaten to death by her boyfriend and a 16-year-old youth.

"This is a case of cold, calculating first-degree murder," Francis Bloom, said in opening statements at the trial of Lisa Becker-Grimshaw, 27, of Springfield. "She was not a battered woman," said Bloom, an assistant district attorney handling the case in Hampden Surperior Court.

But defense lawyer Nancy Gertner contended her client had suffered continued physical, mental and sexual abuse at the hands of her husband and "believed she was in fear of her life and had no alternative."

The body of Thomas Grimshaw, 30, was found on a boat ramp along the Connecticut River on June 5, 1985.

Bloom said a witness saw Becker-Grimshaw and her husband kissing in the car after she picked him up from work on June 5, 1985. Then, he contended, she drove Grimshaw to the Chicopee boat ramp where her boyfriend, Michael A.J. Bruyette, and the teen-ager waited to kill him with baseball bats, stolen days earlier.

Bloom said the 16-year-old would testify that after the killing, she tried to persuade the men to throw the body in the river.

Gertner compared Becker-Grimshaw's mental state to that of a combat veteran suffering post-traumatic stress. "She was pounded every day until she had come to believe there was danger behind every rock," Gertner said.

Police to be investigated

Face second report of racial harassment

STOUGHTON (AP) — Stoughton police face federal and state investigations into alleged harassment of a black Boston police officer who lives in the town.

The case marks the second allegation of police harassment of a black in less than a month in the suburb south of Boston. It is also the latest in a type of case growing in frequency across the state.

Kenneth Fishman, a Boston lawyer, representing Boston Police Patrolman Aaron Gross, said yesterday that he has asked the US Justice Department and the state attorney general to investigate his client's case.

Both agencies have questioned his client in the case, Fishman said, and a spokesman for the state attorney general confirmed that it is being investigated.

Fishman said Gross, who lives in Stoughton with his wife and children, has been stopped four times since July by Stoughton police and once by a Canton police officer, who later was joined by a Stoughton officer.

Gross alleged he has been singled out for harassment and was beaten by white Stoughton police officers and held at gunpoint on Nov. 30.

According to Fishman, Gross suffered head and neck injuries and has not returned to work for Boston police since then.

Stoughton Police Chief William Gross, no relation, said the Police Department is conducting an internal investigation.

Governor's wife in treatment facility

BOSTON (AP)— Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis disclosed yesterday that his wife is being treated for alcohol problems stemming from his unsuccessful presidential race against George Bush.

The drinking problem was the latest in a series of disclosures of substance abuse by Kitty Dukakis, 52, who has long publicly battled her smoking habit and who had disclosed early in her husband's presidential campaign that she had for years abused amphetamines.

He said his wife had successfully fought her addiction to amphetamines but that since the presidential campaign she had used alcohol "in excessive quantities ... on a limited number of occasions while at home."

"As she has now discovered, whether it comes in a bottle or is solid, if you are chemically dependent, you are chemically dependent," he said at a news conference, maintaining his usual stoical demeanor.

Dukakis, who does not smoke and rarely drinks even a glass of wine, said his wife had entered the Edgehill Newport facility in Newport, R.I., Sunday and will stay there for about 30 days.

"She recognizes it. It was her decision to go into treatment," Dukakis said, adding that he and their children supported her choice.

"It is a disease from which you never recover; you're always recovering," he said, calling her alcohol problem another manifestation of her underlying chemical dependency.

The UMass bargain is not a good deal

OVERSUBSCRIBED.
OVERSUBSCRIBED.
COURSE CLOSED.

"At least I didn't get four oversubscribeds," I thought, trying to salvage a shred of optimism about the upcoming semester. Rejection from the bulk of my classes didn't depress me. Why? Because it was done in a compassionate manner.

Darren Garnick

Included in my schedule packet was an apology letter from Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey. I was touched. An exalted, high-ranking official of the UMass administration told me he was sorry.

"While your choices may be more limited this spring," Duffey wrote, "the campus administration and faculty will continue to make every effort to ensure that the quality of your education will not suffer. If your initial schedule does not contain a full set of courses, you should be able to add additional courses during the registration period and make normal degree progress during the spring semester."

There are plenty of open classes, Mr. Duffey. But the communication department flatly refuses to count aerobic dance credits towards graduation. Waiting lists are the equivalent to begging: "If you are in the class of 1990, leave now. You are wasting your time!" was one professor's advice on how to enroll in his communication class.

Although I am treated like an academic vagrant, I don't feel like one. Earlier in his letter, the chancellor had a few words of consolation: "Even with the extra curriculum fees and the tuition increase) the University will remain one of the 'best buys' in higher education in the United States."

Translation: UMass is a good deal, so stop whining and be grateful to have any class you can get.

As a last defense for the incompetent scheduling, the administration reminds us that we are all students at Bargain Hunter's University and our parents would have to sell their homes for us to study anywhere else. Brilliant tactic. Let's not compare our faculty or class access with other universities.

Let's compare the price.

UMass can become the "Coupon Campus." Coupon booklets which are shoved into our mailboxes will always have the staple discounts on pizza, clothing and haircuts. But new coupon territory needs to be explored. Students could be enticed to enroll in undersubscribed classes if they were offered free gifts from the Whitmore showcase. Struggling, unpopular professors can tempt us with 12-piece knife sets.

When my friends at private schools scoff at my schedule, I can always argue that my school is cheaper than their school and that my big brother can beat up their big brother. I can boast about my semester internship at Building 19½ or Railroad Salvage.

Hopefully, the above scenario will remain a fictionalized horror. Cheaper does not mean better. Take all those counterfeit Rubik's Cubes, for example. The fake cubes tended to fall apart after a few uses. The bright colored stickers fell off too. To prevent UMass from degenerating into a fake university, it is the administration's responsibility to solve the oversubscribed crisis. Mike Dukakis and the state budget cuts are timely scapegoats, but this problem has been plaguing students for years.

If Chancellor Duffey would rather run a yard sale than a university, let him toot his horn on the Home Shopping Network.

Choosing between pushing paper and Playdough

"... but sexism is still prevalent!" I said to a male friend the other day. He had the nerve to say that there is no sex discrimination anymore. HE does not see any.

"You're blowing it out of proportion," he declared.

Meredith O'Brien

I picked up the newspaper beside me and pointed to an article, "Look! Here's an article about discrimination in the workplace. It tells about how hard it is to be a career woman and a mother. In most cases, when a couple has a child, the woman stays home, and misses out on career opportunities."

"But the woman bears the child. She needs a recuperation period, plus the fact that women get maternity leave. Someone has to stay at home, it's just more convenient for the woman."

"That's not fair!" I shouted. "Simply because women bear the children does not mean that they should have to stay home. Anyway, how can you expect a mother to 'recuperate' with a baby at home? Every female was not predestined to be a housewife and mother."

"How can a man stay home when he will lose his job?" he questioned.

"There should be paternal, as well as maternal leave offered by companies so that both spouses would have the opportunity to stay at home with their child."

"Okay," he began, "let's say that companies do give paternal leave, who do you think should stay at home? I think that it should be the spouse who makes less money."

"Then the woman would still have to be the one who stays at home because it's been statistically proven that women get paid less than men do. Women are more of a risk to a company because they might take time off to have a family."

He shook his head, "The salaries vary with every job. Not many couples share the same field, so you can't say that it will always be the wife who stays home and earns less money."

"More women would be forced to stay at home simply because they receive lower salaries and have maternal leaves."

"How so?"

"First of all, women get paid less than men because they are more likely to leave the job when they have children. Many women wind up losing their jobs because they stay home longer than the scanty six-month leaves that companies allow. You can't just stick a six-month old baby in daycare! Then the women fall behind their male co-workers, or female co-workers who have no children, because of the time lost while they were at home. Why can a man easily balance a career and a family while women have to choose?"

Now he began to get frustrated. "Don't you think that a father would want to stay home with his child? I agree with you, paternal leave would be a terrific idea, but how can you get companies to agree to it? A company pays for your services and needs you to fill a position. If companies started letting all of their employees stay home, they'd lose money. How can the companies afford it?"

"The government should subsidize all of the leaves, compensate the companies for the money lost. They should require job security when you come back from a parental leave."

"That's not a feasible idea. It wouldn't work if, say a top executive or specialist needed to be replaced."

"We should make it feasible! Women should not have to make a choice between a job and a family — men don't have to! We should be paid according to our qualifications, not our gender. Maternal and paternal leave should be available for parents. There should be job security! I'm not asking for much . . ."

"Idealist," he mumbled. "It should happen, but it never will."

In less than ten years many women of my generation will be faced with this dilemma. We are all in school studying our little hearts out so that we will be successful someday — should we accept the assumption that we are predestined to stay at home?

Both men and women should have the right to stay at home with their children (without losing their jobs) and to play with Playdough and watch Sesame Street.

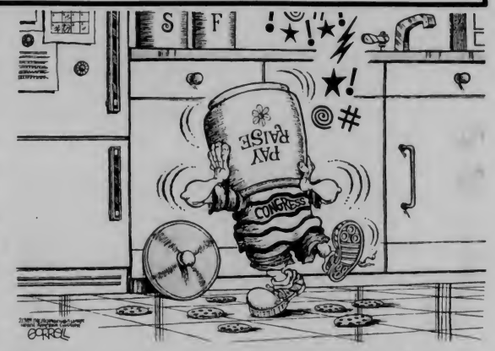
College then, may be a good place for those few young people who are really drawn to academic work, who would rather read than eat, but it has become too expensive, in money, time, and intellectual effort, to serve as a holding pen for large numbers of our young. We ought to make it possible for those reluctant, unhappy students to find alternative ways of growing up, and more realistic preparation for the years ahead."
—Caroline Bird



The real question should be: When does life begin?

A funny thing happened last fall on the way to a referendum. Theologian and anti-abortion activist John Rankin petitioned to place a question on the Massachusetts ballot: When does life begin: conception, viability, birth or other? Attorney general James Shannon panned it because there was no precedent for a multiple choice referendum in this state (as though a primary isn't a multiple choice question). His decision has been appealed; the case will probably end up in the U.S. Supreme Court.

Rusty Denton

The referendum is an insightful piece of work. First, it challenges defenders of abortion to a public vote on the issues. For years they've said most Americans support "abortion rights." However, polls by the (pro-choice) National Abortion Rights Action League show that 40 or 50 percent of the voters nationwide oppose abortion except for incest, rape, or risk to the mother's life. Another 10 or 20 percent oppose all abortions.

Attorney general Shannon's pro-choice inclinations are no secret; it's curious that he would hide behind voting format if he weren't afraid of losing a vote on the issues. Pro-abortion forces in other states have been equally afraid of the public.

Knowing they can't depend on non-existent voters, these activists quickly retreat to a "right of privacy" that is immune to the democratic process. But abortion rights were given in Roe v. Wade on the grounds that medical science didn't know when life began. That is, the Supreme Court ruled that the rights of persons of indeterminate consciousness (unborn children) were subordinate to the rights of tangible people (you and me).

Rankin's argument says that since the Roe opinion hinged on contemporary technology, it must be reviewed when technology advances. His strategy has been to calmly and respectfully educate the public about recent developments in prenatal biology so citizens can knowledgably vote on the issue.

Now you could ask why Rankin is still pursuing this: President Bush is pushing the Supreme Court to overturn Roe and is stacking the Department of Health and Human Services with pro-lifers. The problem with this approach, according to Rankin, is that court decisions are always subject to flip-flops. Laws in all 50 states became obsolete when the Supreme Court legalized abortion in 1973. In 1989, abortion may become illegal again, but for how long — until a liberal majority once again occupies the highest court? Rankin argues that overturning Roe is laudable, but ultimately a state-by-state series of referendums is necessary because the results will compel state legislatures to approve a pro-life constitutional amendment. Amendments, unlike court decisions, are democratic and can't be repealed overnight.

Some people believe abortion "rights" will forever be subject to the winds of politics. I think not. Most of us, no matter how hardened, still have misgivings about taking a human life. Given biological facts and their own common sense, most people know the unborn are alive; that's the true genius of the referendum. Rankin's question shifts the focus from the obvious (circumstances) to the sublime (incipient life). Once we agree the unborn are alive — and any good biologist must — then we will deal with how to address them: as pets, as slaves, as livestock, as parasites, or as citizens. Be honest; those are about the only options, and the first four are repulsive.

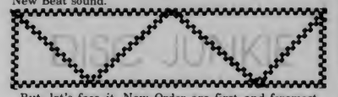
ARTS & LIVING

A New Order in the house

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

It's more or less common knowledge that the unstoppable, high-octane dance-trance called Acid House was filling floors in northern barbarian wildernesses such as Manchester's legendary Hacienda club, more than a year before it was jumped upon by a mob of over-paid "London" (it's not just a city - it's an attitude!) music hacks; Gaultier-suited style fascists who wouldn't know a trend if it came up and bopped them over the head with a rolled-up copy of this month's Face, i.e. last Wednesday's headlines.

So I can't help wondering why those Mancunian marvels, New Order have waited until now to release Technique, an album which latches onto styles of music such as Balearic beats (it was recorded in Ibeza), long-since made redundant by the emergence of the tougher, leaner New Beat sound.



But, let's face it, New Order are first and foremost creators of brilliant pop music, and they have a style which, a few nods to fellow Northerners, the Pet Shop Boys aside, is completely their own. so they don't need to follow "famous for 15 minutes" fashion victims like D-Mob into post-Acid oblivion. After all, the bandwagon only rolls when it's on a downhill slide. So what you've got here is partly retrospective - songs such as "All the Way" and the effortless, melodic, "Love Less" although they have the Balearic sensibilty of the latter-day Woodentops, are essentially Brotherhood revisited (and that was 4 years ago!), with smoother, cleaner lines - and partly Barney and Co. mucking around with Acid, Techno and Deep House.

Well I don't know about you, but History was never one of my strong subjects at school, so I find the latter element far more interesting. "Mr. Disco" is a dream of keyboards overlayed on a punchy House bass riff. It's all very PSB, but I don't have a problem with that. Neither should you.

"Vanishing Point" is pure Marshall Jefferson, and then of course there's the much touted anti-drug song, "Fine Time" which is probably the album's best cut. Like all the best New Order singles, it takes a while to grow on you but soon becomes as necessary as breathing.

You may remember that I mentioned the Todd Terry Project's To The Batmobile Let's Go as one of my top 10 albums of last year. Well now, you'll be excited to learn that it's been given a domestic release in the states on Sleeping Bag records, On the evidence of this, and the mega-House anthem of '88, Royal House's "Can U Party," it's not hard to see why this guy is currently regarded as the hottest producer on the planet. It seems that every Tom, Rick and Kylie wants to be touched by the hand of Todd.

Kicking off with "Bango," a brilliantly structured rhythm trip and the recent club smash, "Weekend," Batmobile dares to boldly go where no house has gone before. Terry wisely limits his use of samples, instead concentrating on manipulating the beat. When he does rip people off it's witty and subtle. On "The Circus" Terry succeeds where the JAMS failed, managing to rip off Abba by building a speeded up sample from "Money Money Money" into the rhythm track. It's hardly noticeable unless you're listening closely, which more or less proves that House isn't just dance music for Ex-heads. I can't wait for the Royal House album.

Finally this week, just for a bit of variation, Lyle Lovett, (another one of my picks of '88) has a new album out this week. Entitled iLyle Lovett & his Large Band it's actually two albums in one. The first side is pure Big Band swing, with a dash of blues for spice. I loved "Here I Am", possibly the funniest pick-up line I've heard, and the strolling blues of "Good Intentions." Flip over to side two for some of the most gorgeous country ballads you'll hear all year, from the lilting Louisiana fiddles of "I Married Her Just Because She Looks Like You" to the more modern folky style of "Nobody Knows Me." There's even a cover of Tammy Wynette's epic "Stand By Your Man" which is probably here as some kind of male-chauvanist joke, but Lovett sings it with such passion, that it sends shivers down your spine nonetheless.

Apart from anything else Lovett is a brilliant lyricist, as original as he is versatile, and nowhere is this more evident than on this album . He can be clever with language or just devastatingly straightforward as on "If You Were To Wake Up.". See him live when he plays Smith College in March.

Wexler: a new age in furniture

By REBBECA MORRISEY
Collegian Staff

Dining Rooms and Furniture for the Typical House, an exhibitof recent worksby aritist/architect Allan Wexler is now at the Univeristy Gallery in the FAC.

Originally Wexler's exhibit was supposed to revolve around nine separate dining rooms, but that project was discontinued because of a lack of funding. For this reason, more of Wexler's recent work is being shown, including small buildings, furniture collages, painitings, and small scale-models as well as proposals for other projects.

"I'm interested in taking everyday human activities and turning them into theater, turning something ordinary into something extraordinary," said Wexler of Scaffold Furniture, one piece in which he placed three scaffold tables on each side of a char, each specially built to hold a glass, a cup, a plate, a lamp, utensils and a napkin respectively. Breaking down the Western ritual of eating into those parts, he said, helps reveal the actual complexity of something which seems simple."

Wexler's small scale-model houses start out as simple and ordinary-looking. "I use them in the way an artist uses a white canvas," he said. "I start with a typical house and transform it."

One of his reasons for doing this he said, is "to make people think differently about themselves and the world." For him, it is the details of a house and the decorating which determine how unique it may be.

Wexler creates his furniture with the transformation of a typical house in mind. The idea is to make people get involved with the space around them.

His pieces often nave moveable parts which allow the users to change the functions of the piece as well as create new areas of space.

The largest building in the exhibit, built at the request of the Jewish Museum of Art in New York, is a seven ft. high Sukkah. It is an Outdoor dining room used by orthodox Jews for the festival of the late harvest, called Sukkot, which also celebrates the Jewish exodus from slavery in Egypt.

The University Gallery plans to publish an illustrated catalogue of Allan Wexler's recent work which will be funded, as was the exhibit, by the Friends of the Fine Arts Center and by the Arts Council and Alumni Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Dining Rooms and Furniture for the Typical House will be on exhibit at the University Gallery through March 17. Gallery hours are Tue.- Fri. 11 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., and Sat. and Sun. 2 p.m.-5 p.m.

Theatre season gets under way

By MICHAEL T. PUOPOLO, II
Collegian Correspondent

Every month this semester, there are several excellent productions being done at all of the Five Colleges. Be sure to check with each college's individual box offices and theater departments for performance times, ticket prices, and performance dates. Here's a run down of what plays are being offered in the area.

Here at the University of Massachusetts, the Department of Theater will be starting the season with a "post modern" version of William Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice. Between Home and the Hunter, is the premiere and play by UMass' own Dudley Stone. This play sets up a love triangle between three friends and its various repercussions. The Department of Theater will end the semester with a play called Albertine, In Five Times. The Music Theater Guild will be performing Stephen Sondheim, Leonard Bernstein, and Jerome Robbins' musical West Side Story. The singing and dancing sensation between rival gangs and a love that can never be is an updated and modern Romeo and Juliet type musical. Not to be outdone, the University Players will also be presenting a musical sometime this spring. Take One, a musical revue, will be done this year by director Evan Shapiro. Beat Cafe continues to provide arts from the fifties and beatnik era every first of the month. Blessed, a humorous comedy dealing with serious issues, will also be presented in the Hampden Theater.

At Amherst College, the Department of Theater will be performing two student created productions: Go Into the Chapel, and V.5. and V.6. Both of these plays were created by the department and the dance classes. Also at Amherst is a revised and shortened version of Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew. The new production is called The Taming. Miss Julie will also be performed. All of these plays are Directing Studio productions.

Smith College is going all out this semester with a total of seven performances. We Won't Pay! We Won't Pay will begin the Smith season. Sainte Carmen of the Main will follow. Then, Action and Icarus' Mother by Sam Shepard will be performed. Both will be performed on the same night. In Back of Beyond is a movement-theater production by graduate student Brian Foley. The Lucky Chance and Ubu the King as well as a third and currently untitled production will also be seen at Smith College on different dates.

Hampshire College also has quite an impressive line-up of plays. Their season starts off with a Russian comedy called, The Seagull by Anton Chekhov. Another comedy show is obvious by its title Just a Few Moments in Purgatory, Then I'll Be Moving on to Hell. Blood Relations will finish off an interesting season.

Mount Holyoke College has only two plays on the agenda for this season. However, they promise to be very enjoyable. Both plays are comic farces. Noises Off comes directly from Broadway and promises laugh after laugh with physical and verbal humor. The Country Wife is also a comedy and shows just how nosy and hypocritical people can really be.

This semester will be a good one for theater. Thanks to the Five College Theater News for their helpful information. Enjoy, and "break a leg" this semester.

Lesy faces death in Forbidden Zone

By TARA HAMMER
Collegian Correspondent

The Forbidden Zone
Michael Lesy
Anchor/Doubleday Books

"How do we deal with death?", is the question Michael Lesy's newest book The Forbidden Zone asks. In each story like chapter, (with only one exception), Lesy talks to different professional people who deal with death everyday in their jobs. A pathologist who attacks the inside of the body, a sochet who religiously and ritualistically kills animals, homicide detectives in Florida and AIDS comforters in San Francisco are all covered.

There's no spiritualism in this book. Lesy is not concerned with what happens to the soul once the body dies. Instead, he is concerned with the effects the dead have on the living. For centuries people have wanted to know what life is all about. Lesy wants to know what death is all about. Perhaps having to cope with the eminent death of his ailing father has incited him to see how others deal with death.

Almost all of us have known someone who has died, but we deal with death maybe once every few years. The people in this book see death everyday. The pathologist uses the "Gestalt theory", concentrating on the organs of the body instead of the corpse as a whole. The homicide detective rationalizes it down to the fact that someone must protect the Ten Commandments. In between these insights are big stretches of descriptive narration. Stories about what Lesy sees and finds in his quest for answers. Stories that are horrifying, unpleasant and true (brutal rapes with knives and bamboo stalks). Shocking . . . yes. Shock value . . . no. As Lesy encountered such earth shaking reality in doing his research, so does the reader in his own search for meaning in The Forbidden Zone.

"Death means nothing for the people who die." says Lesy's father in the chapter on sochets.

It doesn't seem to mean much to the people who live either. Lesy talks to a lot of people, yet none of them have much to say.

What one does find in The Forbidden Zone can be understood well enough to make the book worth reading. An example (in the book): the slaughterer seems to superimpose his hatred for his boss, job, wife, etc. onto the steer he is about to kill, thus killing his hatred temporarily . . . death can be useful.

tion to see what the results of a good mass transit system could be," he said.

That enthusiasm was also voiced by Richard Doyle, regional administrator of the PVTA, who said area residents should be proud of the University and its new facility.

"I hope everyone here recognizes what a good transit facility this is," he said.

The new facility includes refurbished administrative offices, a staff room with snack machines, video games, a television, and a garage that can hold up to 40 buses.

The PVTA's no-fare transit system operates seven days a week, with routes to Amherst, Hadley, South Hadley, Belchertown, Sunderland, South Deerfield, Northampton and Granby.

The Owls disposed of Springfield College on Saturday, though their score was not quite as high as UMass' was in defeat. The Owls beat Springfield 249.75-243.95. But both teams need this win and Johnson feels it will be a hard-fought meet.

"I think the guys were pretty disappointed in their performances at Cortland and it showed at practice," Johnson said. "They've scored low 250s and that's what we hit so I'm optimistic, but the way our scores have been going, we're going to have to hit to win."

tle at the finish, where the gap opened up. We were extremely proud to have 'Massachusetts' on her chest. It takes guts for a freshman to stand up to that."

Another highlight was Tina White's school record in the 20-pound indoor weight in her debut with UMass. White, a fourth-year junior transfer from Worcester State, heaved the weight 39 feet, 10 inches to finish fourth and also qualify her for the New Englands.

When asked about the progress of her team, LaFreniere said, "The throwers are really coming along and they're going to keep improving. The runners were doing double workouts [over intersession] and they went to meets tired. They've been doing really well.

"We don't have a big team but we have quality kids," admits LaFreniere. "We went down there and got quality performances. That really makes a difference. What we are lacking are strong sprinters, hurdlers, and jumpers. We're trying to use recruiting to hopefully fill the gap.

"We plan to peak at the end of February [at the time of the New Englands and the ECACs]. These are good times right now, but the runners will get faster and the throwers will throw farther," said LaFreniere.

We just want a bigger piece of the pie."

Cerutti did address the more entertaining side of his profession, and included sagging Red Sox slugger Jim Rice in a list of the five toughest batters to strike out. The statement drew gasps of feigned horror from the audience.

Healy counseled Cerutti that his own attitude had evolved from his own playing days on such matters as unions and arbitration rights, saying "If it ain't broke, don't fix it. If I were the commissioner of baseball I would do absolutely nothing."

Holy Cross muscles past UMass, 98-90

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — Wanted: A 6'10" or 6'11" man. Must be strong, like to use his muscle, and play games in front of large crowds. Apply at the University of Massachusetts basketball office.

In a nutshell, Holy Cross College took advantage of the lack of UMass height last night when the Crusaders punished the Minutemen, 98-90, at the Hart Center.

Holy Cross' domination inside accounted for 52 of the Crusaders' 98 points. It was Holy Cross 6'9" center, Grant Evans, who administered the brunt of the UMass abuse, pouring in a career high 26 points, including 22 in the second half.

At the start of the second half, Holy Cross went right at the Minutemen and at John Tate, who, despite scoring a career high 24 points, could not hold out against the Crusaders' inside jousting.

The Minutemen began the half down by eight, and pulled to within five with 6:19 left, after two Matt Anderson free throws. The free throws capped a 6-0 run by the Minutemen, who had been down by 11 only 1:22 earlier.

But the Crusaders were able to hold off UMass and Jim McCoy, who finished with 29 points, to improve to 11-10.

UMass, 8-12, went into halftime trailing, 44-36. UMass rallied behind the offense of Tate (16 first-half points) and McCoy (15 first-half points), who scored all the Minutemen's points for the first 13:17 of the half.

Finally, with 6:43 left, UMass' only other first-half scorer, Rafer Giles, nailed a three-pointer to bring the Minutemen within two, 27-25.

After the teams traded baskets, Giles tied the game 31-31 with a follow up shot of a McCoy miss.

For a 4:52 stretch in the middle of the half, it was Tate's superb foul shooting that kept UMass in the game when he hit six straight free throws.

Hoop du jour: George Hardin, who transferred to UMass from Salt Lake Community College this semester, saw his first action last night, entering the game with 13:45 remaining. He played 10 minutes, mainly at power forward, and scored five points.

Men's gymnastics to meet EIGL rival So. Connecticut

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team suffered a tough loss at Cortland College on Saturday. But that meet was not quite so important, at least not as crucial as tonight's meeting with Eastern rival Southern Connecticut State University in New Haven, Conn.

Cortland was a non-league opponent. But Southern Connecticut, like UMass, is 1-1 in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League. The Minutemen, ranked 13th in the country by the National Association of Gymnastics Coaches, knows what this meet means.

"I think as a team we set up the emphasis," UMass coach Roy Johnson said. "They know how important the Southern Connecticut meet is. If we beat Southern Connecticut, we can go into the EIGLs in second place which would be a good spot."

UMass would trail the Naval Academy, which has already beaten the Minutemen and Southern Connecticut in dual meets earlier this season. But both teams are struggling a little right now.

UMass is coming off a loss to Cortland in which it scored a disappointing 253.1. Johnson was shooting for low 260s in that meet but subpar performances on the pommel horse and the horizontal bar prevented the Minutemen from reaching that goal.

But maybe tonight.

"I think we'll be more ready than we were for Cortland," Johnson said. "The two events we didn't look sharp on were pommel horse and horizontal bar but we looked better [Monday] in practice than we did in the meet."

The Owls have problems of their own, though. United States Olympic coach Abe Grossfeld has lost his top performer, Hector Salazar. Salazar, a member of the Peruvian national team, broke his forearm in an international competition in Argentina and is out for the season.

Grossfeld will look to junior Carlton Noble to make up for Salazar's absence. Noble is the Owls' top all-around performer with a high of 54.5 on the year.

Men's and women's indoor track approach end of season

● Men coming off Ocean State Invitational

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team completed its final invitational non-scoring meet this past Sunday. All of the team's performances over intersession were of the non-scoring variety.

"This was our best meet since we started intersession," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "The majority of our kids had been down a little, because of our double workouts over the break. Most of the kids did quite well in the meet."

O'Brien said the best grou?placed second and fifth respectively in the 60-yard dash.

"They both ran real well," said O'Brien. "But we've now come to expect that from them."

Herb Hephner (1:56.7) and Jim McDonnald (1:56.9) topped UMass runners in the 800. They finished fourth and sixth respectively.

Other performances which were cited by O'Brien were senior Reinardo Florez in the mile (fourth place, 4:18.6) as well as the mile relay team which placed third.

Evan Walters and Steve Brown had what O'Brien called "outstanding performances."

"This was the first meet of the second half of the season," said O'Brien. "We've been working hard all year with the final two weeks of the season in mind. I think our work is about to pay off."

O'Brien will find that out this Sunday when UMass participates in the Easterns.

● Frosh women shine at Ocean State meet

By RICK SETO
Collegian Correspondent

Who said freshmen can't do anything right?

The two superfrosh of the University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team, Precious Hill and Lee Ann Ambrose,came through once again with stellar performances as they were among the many UMass highlights in the Ocean State Invitational Sunday. Hill won both the 3000- and 5000-meter races in times of 9:59.2 and 17:48.9, respectively, which were good enough to qualify her for the New England championships. Hill has also qualified for the New Englands in the 1000 and the mile. "We're kind of used to having Precious being outstanding," joked UMass coach Julie LaFreniere. "She's only two seconds from qualifying for the ECACs in the 3000. She's definitely running the 3000 (in the NEs), but whether she'll run in anything else will be based upon the schedule."

Ambrose picked up two second places in the 200- and the 400-meter races. In the quartermile, her specialty, Ambrose finished with a time of 56.7 seconds, cracking the 57-second barrier for the first time. Despite an excellent time, she finished behind Brown University's Terri Smith, who has run a lightning-quick 53-second quarter and was invited to the Seoul Olympic tryouts.

"She did great and went after her (Smith)," said LaFreniere. "She lost a lit-

Minutewomen to swim against Mount Holyoke

By DEBORAH PICARDI
Collegian Correspondent

The University Of Massachusetts women's swimming team will be winding down a tiring, yet successful regular season schedule tonight at 7 p.m. against Mount Holyoke College at Boyden Pool.

Mt. Holyoke (4-2) is coming off a third place finish at the Seven Sisters Tournament this past weekend.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb expects his team to have a fairly easy meet. "Mt. Holyoke has gotten much better than in the past, but they are not a very strong team," he said.

Newcomb does like to swim against them, however. "Mt. Holyoke gives us good competition. It is a good opportunity for swimmers to compete in different events, relax, and qualify for the New Englands."

All the Minutewomen will get the chance to better their times and beat the standing UMass records. Saturday's

Three opinions on America's pastime

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The pitcher would raise the mound 18 inches and make sure the league never expands to Denver, where the ball "really carries." The author wants to roll up all the world's astroturf and use it to fill in the Minneapolis Metrodome. The broadcaster wouldn't change a thing.

Nearly 70 restless baseball fans skidded their way over icy roads to hear Toronto Blue Jay hurler John Cerutti, Mets cable broadcaster Fran Healy and author Dan Okrent last Friday at Amherst College. The three authorities on the game were asked to tell the audience what they would do "if they were the Commissioner of Baseball" as part of the ongoing Five College Forum lecture series.

All three make some sort of living by practicing their love of the game of baseball, and share local connections as well. Cerutti racked up 29 wins for Amherst College before graduating to the major leagues in 1981, Healy — who stretched a major league career over several teams in the early 70s — is a native of Holyoke, and Okrent lives in nearby Worthington. Okrent, who wrote "Nine Innings" and co-authored "The Ultimate Baseball Book," most accurately represented the fan's view of the world of baseball, as the discussion ranged from drug testing to the designated hitter. As Cerutti struggled to explain why the arguably overpaid baseball players are threatening another walkout two summers down the road, and Healy defended the mounting loss of network television baseball exposure to cable, Okrent went on the attack.

"The commissioner must reverse the trend towards pay TV, there's too much baseball on that we have to pay for," he said. "If I were commissioner games would be on networks TV and the World Series would be played during the day, so as to build an audience (of younger fans)," Okrent said.

Okrent also went on record as in favor of abolishing the designated hitter, and "everyone who favors the DH," and proposed forcing loud New York Yankee owner George Steinbrenner to move his ballclub to the Nevada desert. "I would force him to spend all his time in his office and lease the stadium to the government for use as a nuclear testing site."

Cerutti, who was recently named the union representative for his Toronto Blue Jays (and himself signed a pretty fat contract), seized the opportunity to present the players' side of the issue in the growing major league labor dispute. "There is no reason why such a healthy industry as baseball should ever see a work stoppage," he said.

"[Recently], the owners have generally treated the players with disdain, and their salaries have not coincided with the revenue increases of the last four years.

Smith investigates homophobic message

By C.C. SANDORFI
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Two anonymous anti-homosexual messages were found on dormitory room doors at Smith College, college officials reported Monday.

College News Director Debra Bradley said the incidents are thought to have occurred between Dec. 21 and Jan. 8, during the students' winter recess.

Bradley condemned the incidents, saying they were very painful to the victims and to everyone at the college.

"It's frustrating and sad to see these kinds of comments directed at people in our community," she said.

The homophobic messages, found on two doors in Tyler House, were denounced in a memo from college officials circulated on Jan. 25 to students, staff, and workers in the dormitory, said Bradley.

She said the memo explained what had happened and it indicated the college would fully investigate the incidents.

One of the homophobic slurs, said Bradley, was scrawled on a personal photograph and attached to the student's door; the other, she said, was written on a student's memo board on her door.

James Molloy, director of security at Smith, said the photograph was turned over to Northampton police for a fingerprint check.

However, police said, they could not lift any prints from the picture.

Molloy and Smith security will continue to look into the incidents and anonymous notes containing derogatory racial remarks, said Bradley.

In early 1987, other minority students were harassed with similar notes, and in 1986 racial slurs were spray-painted on the steps of a campus building, according to a story printed Feb. 7 in the Springfield Union-News.

"I suspect there are often people on campus who are victims of homophobia, unfortunately," she said. "But there is homophobia at Smith College like there is in Northampton, at UMass, in New York City, and in the world."

AIDS victims get buddies through program

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

Although society has shunned AIDS victims, a program in Springfield is trying to destroy the myths surrounding this fatal disease and its patients.

Volunteers in the AIDS Buddies Program, a support group founded in 1986, provide companionship for AIDS patients.

"Just being there and holding their hand means so much. A lot of these people have isolated themselves from society and this program breaks down a lot of walls," Mike Izdepski, a volunteer in the program, said.

Izdepski, 36, said he joined the state funded program two years ago after hearing other support volunteers speak about their experiences at a Valley Gay Alliance meeting in Northampton.

"I volunteered because I have the same fears about AIDS as everyone else," Izdepski said, "and I wanted to do something after hearing them speak."

The support volunteers work with the Visiting Nurse Association, adding information to the patients' medical charts. Patients are visited in their homes or at hospitals, depending on the victims' health, Izdepski said.

University continues polymer research

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Researchers at the University of Massachusetts are working to produce plastics made from fully biodegradable natural polymers, which will convert into harmless elements when buried.

The Polymer Science and Engineering and Biochemistry departments have been working closely together for the past three years, attempting to create a plastic that will break down into carbon dioxide and water when put into a properly functioning, bacteria laden landfill.

"Everything nature makes, nature can destroy," said Robert Lenz, one of the initial founders of the Polymer Science Department at UMass and driving forces behind the study.

Lenz said he believes that within a few years natural polymers produced by bacteria can displace the synthetic polymers — made from petroleum — which are now used to produce disposable plastic packaging materials. Polymers are the very large molecules, which form the basis of a variety of "synthetics" including fibers, films, paints and rubber, as well as plastics.

SGA begins campaign to decrease budget cuts

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association yesterday launched what officials called "powerful" efforts to mobilize volunteers to protest further budget cuts from plaguing state colleges and universities.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said the SGA is compiling a list of students and parents who are willing to lobby the State House in April when the state budget process will be underway.

"Our short-term goal is to try and affect the state budget," she said. "We're hoping to get at least 100 to 200 students [who are] willing to mobilize at any time."

Orefice said she and Michael Greiner, chairman of the public policy committee, have contacted student leaders at state colleges and universities and formed a coordinating committee to discuss a unified effort to block further budget reductions.

"We're trying to gain the momentum of colleges and universities across the state," she said.

The committee will meet Monday at the UMass Medical Center in Worcester, she said.

Officials at the Department of Research and Development at the University of Massachusetts, said in the past two years, the state has reduced the University's budget by more than $15 million dollars in overall reductions.

Orefice said the long add/drop lines, academic program cuts, and the possibility that many seniors may not graduate on time are results of state budget cuts.

"This is what the cuts have done to us. They've cut us three times in the past 18 months," she said. "Don't they think the investment now is worth what we'll give back in the future?"

Representatives from the SGA are also attempting to hold floor meetings in campus residence halls to increase student awareness of the issue, Orefice said.

"I think students are the greatest asset this University has," she said. "Hopefully through that context, we can get people to be active volunteers.'"

Orefice urged students to get involved with the effort rather than have their position defended by a University administrator or student representative.

"It's fine for an administrator to go up and say we need more money," she said. But, "it's a lot more powerful to get a student, with no other affiliation, to stand up in front of their state representative and say 'we have no money.'" Orefice said.

The SGA is in the process of collecting names of parents and students who are interested in volunteering in any capacity including: letter writing campaigns, telephoning state representatives, or working in preparation for the march on the State House in April. Anyone who might be interested should contact the SGA immediately, Orefice said.

Move to up pay for teachers underway

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Teachers salaries are still among the lowest in the nation and Massachusetts is no exception, but a reform movement in education is aimed at changing things.

"[Teachers] are still not being paid the same as autoworkers," said Marilyn Haring-Hidore, dean of the school of education at the University of Massachusetts. "We need to have higher teacher salaries."

The movement still has a long way to go before starting teachers salaries, about $18,500, compare with that of engineers, who can expect to start at $30,600; or computer professionals, who start about at $27,756, according to an National Education Association Today article.

Currently, a starting teacher can expect to make about $18,000 according to the Massachusetts Department of Education.

"Progress is being made," said NEA Compensation Project Manager John Dunlop in the article, "but it's spotty. We're making gains in states that are doing well economically, and we're doing well in comparison to some [other] occupations."

In the five years of reform, teachers salaries have risen, "but is the improvement enough to attract people into teaching," Dunlop said. "Probably not. At least not yet."

This is not the case at the UMass school of education said Hidore.

"Business is booming," she said, "Right now people are beating down the doors trying to become teachers."

Hidore attributed much of the interest to the reform movement and, that four-out-of-five applicants are first of their families to go to college.

Because they are the first to "break the mold" in the family they are interested in teaching as a profession, she said.

The school of education is also trying to attract more minority applicants, Hidore said.

"We have a diverse population of school kids, so we should have a diverse population of teachers," she said.

Hidore said programs to attract more minority applicants are aimed at getting the word out that teaching is a good job.

The programs are also aimed at minority males because, Hidore said, "there's something about [teaching] that is not innately appealing."

Also, Hidore pointed out that many new teachers are not women.

"Those women that might have gone into teaching in the 1950s and '60s have, in the '80s, become professionals such as doctors or lawyers," she said.

Program allows discussion

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

The exclusiveness of the University of Massachusetts workshop: White Allies Against Racism gives white students, staff, and faculty a chance to discuss oppression in a comfortable setting, according to group leader Felice Yeskel.

"I understand why people would be mistrustful of a program like this," she said. "This is an opportunity for whites to take an honest look at their own prejudices."

Susan Kahn of the Office of Human Relations, said registration for the workshop is full and about four people are waiting to enroll. The group was formed last semester as a project of the Office of Human Relations, Kahn said. Yeskel and Donna Bourassa of the Social Issues Training Project, are the volunteer leaders of the group.

Kahn said more than half of the 15 participants are either faculty or staff, and all but one are women. Last year's group consisted of nine women and one man.

"I could speculate that women feel more comfortable discussing things in groups," she said.

The group will meet on six consecutive Thursdays, starting tomorrow.

Yeskel said the discussions will be determined by the group itself, focusing on experiences and issues of racism that have directly affected the participants. They will examine white culture and how it can help improve relationships between whites and blacks, she said.

Sherwood Thompson, of the Office of Third World Affairs, said "any group that comes together for the purpose of discussing issues of oppression is to be commended."

Student government senator Brian Darling said he does not object to the group and said there should be more programs like it. Racial prejudice, he said, is just as prevalent among minorities as it is among whites.

Kahn said the group provides an atmosphere where whites can feel more comfortable talking about these issues.

"Blacks don't need to hear how racist we are," she said. "The group is based on the premise that before we can fight racism, we have to acknowledge the racism that is within ourselves."

UMass creates program to better public education

By STEPHANIE SIGELMAN
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to increase learning and equality in public schools and reverse what some educators see as deteriorating conditions, the University of Massachusetts has formed the Coalition for School Improvement.

The Coalition, the product of 38 public, secondary schools in Western Massachusetts and educators from UMass, was founded five years ago and is funded annually by the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education. The only cost to join the Coalition is a time commitment by the teachers, said the Director of the Coalition, Robert L. Sinclair.

Beth Gilding Watrous, Director for school services of the Coalition, said, "Learning is, in a major way, the result of interaction between the learner and the environment; by changing the environment it is possible to increase learning."

Sinclair and Watrous stressed that achievement levels increase when the school environment fosters teaching which is responsive to all learners. This notion, Sinclair said, of accommodating the needs of all students, not just the high-achievers, is reflected in the variety of socio-economic and cultural backrounds as well as ages of the students attending schools that participate in the Coalition.

According to Sonia M. Nieto, director of the Center for Educational Equity, facilitating interaction between culturally diverse students is one of several coalition-sponsored projects that aims at teaching students to live in and recognize the part which they play in this multicultural society.

Last month the Coalition brought educators from Holyoke and Shutesbury together to plan an exchange with students from Shutesbury Elementary School and Lawrence School, Nieto said.

Shutesbury Elementary has 150 pupils, mostly white, while Lawrence has 580 pupils, of which 60 percent are Hispanic. Nieto said she feels it is necessary to take the changing demographics of area schools into consideration when planning a curriculum.

One goal of the Coalition is to be able to "conduct research and studies that would permit us [educators] to learn more about what it takes to promote equity in schools and to be able to disseminate that information," Sinclair said.

According to Nieto, much of this research is done by study groups whose members consist of teachers, principals and other educators. Both Sinclair and Nieto expressed enthusiasm about the fact that these study groups and various programs initiated by the Coalition are drawing educators not only from US territories but from neighboring countries as well.

Sinclair said she hopes the recent budget cuts will not infringe on the efforst of the Coalition. The only direct cost the Coalition pays is in assisting the 10 graduate students who work with the group to pay for some of their education costs.

The graduate students use the Coalition as a laboratory for their work and education — traveling to schools affiliated with the group and working with faculty, students, and group leaders.

"If you're going to do important education work, you can't have the public schools separate from the University," Sinclair said. "We think a partnership between the University and public schools is a powerful way to reform the American educational experience."

Society recruits minorities to sciences

By ALLEN BERNARD

The National Society of Black Engineers is holding a registration drive Feb. 8 to 10 to promote minority participation in the society and the sciences.

Jennifer Smith, vice president of the University of Massachusetts chapter, said the Society tries to make minority science majors feel more a part of UMass.

She said the group "forms a bond between minorities who are in the technical fields," and teaches minorities how to network with one another before and after they graduate.

The Society, which was formed in 1975 and is headquartered in Alexandria, Virginia, has 5,000 members nationwide and about 30 members at UMass, Smith said.

Among other activities, the Society engages in a high school out-reach program that try to help minority students go on to college through tutoring and counseling efforts.

Counselors for abused women sought

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The chance to be a woman in the Counseling Advocator Program who lends a listening ear to sexually assaulted or abused women has arrived.

Applications for a counselors positions are due today at the Everywoman's Center.

Advocates, and even those who would like to just learn counseling skills for a $50 fee; participate in a 50-hour training session in crisis intervention, short term counseling, and legal and medical advocacy, said Deb Levy, the program coordinator of volunteers for the Counseling Advocator Program at the Everywoman's Center.

"The goal of our program is to help reempower the victims of sexual assault," she said.

When women have been subjected to incest, rape, or battery, Levy said, they often feel as though they have lost control in making decisions. "When you're being forced to do something, you don't have any choices," she said.

"It's very rewarding to see them take control of their life and to know you are helping women. By talking to someone you

Historian Barbara Tuchman dies at 77

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) – Barbara Tuchman, a two-time Pulitzer Prize-winning author whose books revealed the lessons of history, died Monday of complications after a stroke. She was 77.

Tuchman was admitted to Greenwich Hospital on Saturday and died Monday afternoon, said hospital spokeswoman Eleanor Hannon.

Tuchman's latest book, "The First Salute," a look at the American Revolution and the Dutch Revolution that preceded it by 200 years, has been on The New York Times best-seller list for more than nine weeks.

She said it would be her last book because of her failing eyesight.

Tuchman wrote 10 books, winning the Pulitzer Prize for history for "The Guns of August" in 1962, and for "Stilwell and the American Experience in China" in 1971.

In 1978, she was awarded the Gold Medal for History of the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters. She received 22 honorary doctorates.

She also wrote "The Proud Tower," a story of Europe before World War I, and "A Distant Mirror: The Calamitous 14th Century," which traces the tumult of the period by following the career of a feudal lord, Enguerrand de Courcy VII.

"The Guns of August," the book that brought her fame when it was published, examined how the military buildup in Europe during the years of this century led inexorably to the outbreak of World War I.

It was a favorite of President John F. Kennedy because of its lessons for leaders in the nuclear age, and he presented a copy to British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

Tuchman was born on Jan. 30, 1912, in New York City, and was graduated from Radcliffe College in 1933. She lived in Greenwich.

Her mother, Alma Morgenthau, was the daughter of Henry Morgenthau Sr., Woodrow Wilson's ambassador to Turkey.

Tuchman began her writing career as an editorial assistant and occasional correspondent for The Nation, which her father, investment banker Maurice Wertheim, bought in 1935 to save from bankruptcy. She covered President Franklin D. Roosevelt's 1936 campaign and the Spanish Civil War.

During World War II, she worked for the US Office of War Information. She once described her job as being "to write stories beamed to Europe, trying to acquaint our European listeners, much against their will, with the extent of America's war effort in the Far East."

Her first book was "Bible and Sword," an account of the founding of Israel, which was published in 1956 after being rejected by a number of publishers.

"The experience of writing history affected me as I suppose heroin does the addict, and from then on I was caught," she explained. "As an historian, I belong to the How rather than the Why school."

■ polymers

Lenz and colleague R. Chilton Fuller of the biochemistry department have assembled a team of 10 doctors, graduate students, and one undergraduate to examine the biodegradable polymers which will disappear completely in a landfill in less than a year.

Presently, plastic packaging, by contrast, made of synthetic polymers may take hundreds of years to totally decompose.

The new, bacterially-produced polymer, Lenz said, should not be confused with current biodegradable packaging, which is partially degradable – leaving behind remnant non-degradable pieces.

The team found that many bacteria, when deprived of a critical component of their food in the soil, will manufacture and store polymers within themselves. They then live of their own polymers, as a hibernating animal lives off stored fat. The researchers grow the bacteria in the laboratory withholding the critical component, then separate them from the polymers they produce, later converting the polymers into plastic. A variety of plastics can be produced since different bacteria produce different polymers.

Lenz said commercialization prospects for the new plastics are good because the technology used is available and inexpensive. He said he believes the product will be ready in three to four years.

know this person isn't in isolation anymore," Levy said.

To be an effective counselor, she said, the person should be interested in working with people, concerned about sexual assault, and committed to helping victim survivors get the treatment they deserve as well as willing to look at themselves because the advocates' helping hands often provoke turbulence within themselves.

"It's a hard issue to deal with. Rape and sexual assault are very painful issues," Levy said, adding that the pain is heightened by realizing how often it happens.

She said the advocates, who work a daytime shift between the office's hours of 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. or a night shift from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. using a beeper system, counsel about one to two people each shift either from calls on their 545-0800 hotline or from women who visit the office, located in Nelson House near fraternity/sorority park.

"You don't get numb to it," Levy said. "We teach people how to deal with their feelings. That's why we provide counselors with a place to talk about this and to help people deal with their own feelings so it doesn't interfere with their work with survivors."

Weekly meetings are held to talk about the cases, she said.

"It's a good opportunity for people to get experience working with other people and counseling."

Students protest merger plan

BOSTON (AP) – More than 250 Madison Park High School students marched from the Combat Zone to School Department headquarters yesterday to protest a proposal that would bring students from a neighboring school to their building.

The proposal met with opposition when it was presented by School's Superintendent Laval S. Wilson to the school committee as part of a new student-assignment plan.

Many school committee members opposed Wilson's proposal to close two schools and merge Boston Technical High School and Madison Park High School into a single vocational school

Bombing victim testifies in sedition trial

SPRINGFIELD (AP) – A man who lost his lower leg in a courthouse bombing took the stand yesterday in the trial of three people accused of plotting that blast and others in an alleged scheme to topple the government.

Edmund Narine, 51, of Brockton testified at the US District Court trial that he was sitting in the Suffolk Superior Courthouse in Boston on April 22, 1976, when "the world went blank."

"I recall waking up in a room which was shattered," said the witness, a Trinidad native who was applying for a cab driver's license at the time of the blast. "I recall trying to move, but I couldn't."

Narine's leg was severed just below the knee. He was among a score of people injured in the explosion that prosecutors maintain was among several planned by the group of accused terrorists, called the Jonathan Jackson-Sam Melville Unit, to further their alleged aim of overthrowing the government.

Defendants Raymond Luc Levasseur, his wife, Patricia Levasseur, and Richard Williams have been charged with seditious conspiracy, racketeering and racketeering conspiracy in the unusual trial. They each face a maximum of 60 years in prison if convicted.

Charges against two other defendants have been dropped because they are already serving lengthy prison sentences; another two defendants have pleaded guilty to various charges; and one defendant will be tried separately.

On the stand, Narine recalled in an emotionless voice the scene of devastation after the bombing. "I remember seeing a man coming through the dust and I recall him making the remark, 'Oh My God, look at this man,'" he said. "Then I blacked out."

He said he regained consciousness in Massachusetts General Hospital. "My left leg was off. It had been taken off below the knee. My right elbow was shattered. There were burns under my right eye, burns across my chest and abdomen, a huge burn on the right inside of my leg."

Tales of the hell of add-drop

I've been lucky.

I've been exempt from the add/drop blues for the most part in my eight semesters at the University. And, when I've had to add courses, standing in line has only lasted a few minutes.

Pedro Pereira

This semester, fortunately my last, I had to add a course because the creative writing class I wanted was oversubscribed. The course's oversubscription didn't surprise me, for in my college career I've only been accepted into one English class besides the freshman writing course. I ended up dropping the class anyway because everyone who had had the professor teaching the course so advised me.

I wanted that creative writing class badly, though. So badly that I set my alarm clock for six o'clock. Unfortunately, when the alarm went off the comfort of my pillow and the warmth of the covers tempted me to forget how badly I wanted the class.

When I finally stepped outside my dorm after 8 a.m. I noticed some students already walking back, holding the dreaded white and green add/drop forms, wearing self-satisfaction smiles. I wondered how many of these grinning idiots who don't understand the sanctity of sleep had added English courses.

I worried.

I stopped by the Campus Center to pick up an add/drop form while my mind suggested getting a cup of coffee. Images of the grinning idiots expelled the suggestion from my mind, and I quickened the pace toward Barlett Hall, where I sought a line on the first floor. Unable to find one, I was about to panic when I discovered a sign indicating the add/drop line for English courses was downstairs.

Again I found no line in the basement; instead a couple of middle-aged women handed out admission tickets. I grabbed a ticket, which informed me I had an appointment between 10:15 and 10:30 with someone in the English department.

Not a bad idea, this admission ticket concept, I thought.

Heading back to the Campus Center to act on the suggestion my mind had made earlier, a fear took over me: what if I can't get the writing course?

So, I decided to swing by Machmer Hall, since it was on the way and pick up an anthropology course just in case. I had picked one up in a previous semester in about 10 minutes. But to my dismay, greedy-eyed students overflowed the corridor in Machmer that led to the anthropology add/drop table, which compelled me to seek a line somewhere else.

Thompson Hall was nearby, and I figured I might be able to pick up a political science course. Last year I stood in line there for a mere 20 minutes. But I found no lines there and concluded the department was using the admission-ticket system. Making another appointment for that day didn't appeal to me. Besides, I wanted to catch up on lost sleep for having gotten up early.

In the Campus Center, I sneaked a glance at a revised course schedule book and found a classics class that seemed interesting. I hurried to Herter Hall, with the cup of coffee I hadn't yet had burning my mind.

As I stepped off the elevator in Herter's fifth floor, about 50 students sitting on the floor were getting up and attempted chaotically to form a line. The classics department add/drop table had just opened. By miracle, in a few seconds I stood in the middle of the line.

It took me about 10 minutes to add the course I wanted.

I decided to blow off the English department appointment. They had never truly wanted me in English classes anyway. And when they did, they stuck me with the professor everyone hates.

After a cup of coffee, I joined the ranks of the grinning idiots, counting my blessings for this being my last semester.

I've been lucky.

How to become a professional student — against your will

What does being a senior mean to most people? Theoretically, it means that one is graduating and hopefully starting a real life. Usually this means getting a job, forgetting that you ever really went to college, and hoping that this was all a terrible dream.

Nancy Cohen

Like Bobby Ewing on Dallas.

Unfortunately, the University's meaning of the word senior means that either they enjoyed having you so much here that they would love to have you back for another semester, or they decided that you haven't paid quite enough money on classes that you take merely to get the credit. People suggest when you don't get the classes that you either take them during intersession and summer or that you withdraw. I must say they give you a hell of choice.

Over the last two years, the English department has lost 18 of their professors due to the hiring freeze, yet UMass insists that every student be well rounded and diverse. Sounds great in theory, but to every student's dismay, theory can't get you classes.

During this add-drop period, there were fist fights in line because of the stress of waiting five hours only to find the class closed. Professors were verbally abused because they have to close their classes. What people don't understand is that it's not the professors' fault and it is just as hard on them – probably even more difficult because they have to say no to people who won't graduate because of them.

Talk about guilt.

What's important to emphasize here is that it's not just happening to seniors, (although its most alarming when your name appears in the "SENIORS ONLY" box on your schedule) it's happening to everyone.

I find it ironic how most students can't get classes in their majors, yet we can justify funding for a hockey arena. Last semester at a SGA meeting one Senator claimed that building this arena could place us in the esteemed company of Harvard, Yale and UPenn, although I have to wonder whether they realize that if you have a crappy school system you can't get placed with them – even if you have comparable sports equipment.

Instead of these people donating all this money for Visitor Centers and Hockey Arenas, why don't they give money for some real causes like teachers and classes? You remember those things, don't you? They're the reasons we came to this esteemed University. But I guess that wouldn't do since you can't engrave your name on a teacher or a class. Well I guess you can if you want to brand them, but I think there are laws against this. Aren't there?

So what it comes down to is that UMass was starting to make itself look good over the last decade. We had a reputation for being one of the top 10 state Universities in the country, but thanks to people like Dukakis who believe that private education is more important than public, we can kiss our reputation goodbye, along with our professors, classes and TAs.

Knock $215 off your taxes

By now we've all gone through the hassle of add/drop due to closed and oversubscribed courses. We're also very familiar with the budget crisis, and what the cutbacks will do to public education.

To demonstrate the problem, I'll be Mike Dukakis. I've just badly botched a presidential campaign and tried to bury a state budget for the purposes of winning popular support so I could wear a tuxedo on Jan. 20.

Instead, I've got people writing letters telling me what a rotten jerk I am. If I were running again for Governor in 1990, I'd levy taxes only as a last resort. Governors who tax don't get elected, as I discovered in 1978 when I lost to Ed King. What is more important to me right now? Is it making people in this state happy? No. Is it balancing a state budget by any available means so I can use it as another "miracle" in the next election? Yes.

Now imagine I'm me again, here's what we do. Focus on the $215 we paid for "curriculum support." If you or your parents owe any state income tax, deduct $215 from your return, and enclose a statement that reads: "THE AMOUNT WITHHELD FROM THIS RETURN WILL BE PAID WHEN MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITS REAL CURRICULUM SUPPORT FOR PUBLIC HIGHER EDUCATION." You can change the wording, but use the capitals.

If enough of us do this, maybe Mike will get the message that he can't tax his way out of every financial crisis, no matter what office he's in.

Afro-Americans need self-knowledge to combat racism

America is embarking upon a new phase in history. There is a resurgence in the air. The generation of civil rights activists of the sixties are stepping aside. The White media has the Klan on Entertainment Tonight. The skinhead phenomenon received the highest rating this television season. Miami burned for the fourth time. "Mississippi Burning," which dramatized the brutalization and murder that Whites have inflicted on Blacks, is a box office smash. Proposition forty-two is excluding Blacks from possible athletic scholarships.

Afro-Americans, have you ever asked yourself why only a few Blacks even make it to college in America? Have you ever asked yourself why American history has ignored Afro-American history, ignored Afro-American contributions? Asked yourself if you are proud to be a citizen of a country whose government is the number one killer and destroyer of Black leaders? A land where our parents witnessed Blacks being lynched in the south. Where Black children are fostered by society to believe they are second-class citizens. Where our law enforcement agencies send half of our college-aged males to prison and victimize the other half in the streets.

Are you proud of a nation whose system of exchange is based upon the gold extracted from a country that openly oppresses Black Africans? Black Africans mine the gold and diamonds only to be denied basic human rights. Why hasn't the United States condemned the South African Government or imposed an embargo?

K. Andrew Mitchell

Have you ever thought about why the US government gave reparations to the Japanese Americans for their internment yet has neglected to even make Afro-Americans an offer? The Japanese were imprisoned for four years; Blacks were enslaved for four hundred years.

Do you question media coverage which discredits our Black leadership, depicting some as hate-monging tyrants? They did it with Garvey, Malcom, Coltrane and Newton. The United States made Khadafy public enemy number one for protecting his beautiful Black homeland which possesses the richest soil in the world. When will the white world supremacy end?

Collegiate racism is prevalent throughout the world. Black students are often targets of violence. What can we do on a predominantly White college campus that has already experienced two vicious racist attacks in the past two years? We must protect ourselves. The skinheads are provoking violence nationwide. The Klan is steadily moving North. The police are harassing, demoralizing, and murdering our brothers across the United States.

In the words of the immortal Elliot Ness, "What are we prepared to do?" Black students have to continue to to excel in academics to pave a bright future for our people. We've got to start with our children. We have to replace negative images portrayed by American society with pride in their people and a desire to achieve. We've got to teach them American history according to the Afro-American experience. We've got to come together to combat racial violence which exists in America. Before Black students can make changes, we've got to wake up.

ARTS & LIVING

Metheny jazzing up the FAC

By COSMO MACERO Jr.
Collegian Staff

Who says contemporary jazz guitarists are fat headed, pretentious, self-indulgent scaliwags? Remember, it was Pat Metheny who sat back and comped on rhythm guitar at Live Aid while good buddy Carlos Santana tore the place apart during "Open Invitation".

It was Pat Metheny who backed up folk heavyweight (heh, heh) Joni Mitchell on her 1979 Shadow and Light tour.

It was Pat Metheny who, after scoring the soundtrack to The Falcon and the Snowman, forked over a massive chunk of the limelight to David Bowie on the record's international hit "This is Not America".

And it's Pat Metheny who plays the Fine Arts Center tonight at 8 p.m.

Metheny is your typical overachiever. Long before the days of Los Angeles' Guitar Institute, home of today's speedfreak, six string boy wonders (i.e. Paul Gilbert, Vinnie Moore), he was setting the standard as a teenaged instructor at both the University of Miami and the Berkley College of Music in Boston.

For the past ten years, Metheny has continually been recognized for his adept guitar and compositional skills. Racking up a slew of Best Jazz Guitarist awards from Guitar Player, Downbeat, Performance and Musician magazines, he has maintained a level of excellence reserved only for the industry's top artists.

While so many of his contempories sit mired in the anonymity of the jazz-funk-rock "the audience is too stupid to understand what I'm doing"scene; Metheny continues to advance and innovate (guitar synthesizer and synclavier) at no expense to his eager listeners.

Tonight's FAC show will most likely include new material from The Pat Metheny Group's upcoming album, in addition to stuff spanning the Cambridge resident's disc history from Bright Size Life to Still Life.

Don't call Metheny a fusion guitarist. In fact, you might not even want to call him a guitarist at all. For all the broad ground it covers, the term "musician" is quite appropriate.

Selleck has no alibi for disappointing comedy

By RAYMOND MARTIN
Collegian Correspondent

Her Alibi
Mt. Farms Theatres

Some movies are brilliant, some are awful. Her Alibi falls somewhere in between.

Tom Selleck plays Phillip Blackwood, an author of several predictable mystery novels who's in a four-year slump. Desperate for ideas, he hangs around court rooms waiting for intriguing cases. The day's cases are dull until Lena (played by Paulina Prozikova) comes in. She's beautiful. So beautiful, in fact, that Phil decides she can't be guilty. He sees her case as a possible best-selling story, so to prevent her from going to jail, he makes up an alibi for her, telling the police that they are lovers.

Lena goes to live with Phil at his beautiful house out in the country to substantiate the alibi. Once there, Phil realizes that Lena is more than she appears to be. Not only can she throw a knife accurately enough to impale a bug on the wall, but she is a crack shot with a bow and arrow—usually. Then little accidents start to happen. Phil is almost squashed and drowned at the same time by a combination of his garage door and 4x4. He is shot in the rear end with an arrow, and later he is almost burned alive. All of these "mishaps" lead him to believe that Lena is trying to kill him, and with good reason. In a phone call from the sergent, he learns that if he should somehow die before rescinding his alibi, she will almost certainly go free.

The movie is nothing special. Sellick and Porzikova are very likable as the main characters in this movie but the script they have to work with is lame and ridiculous. Not only are we expected to believe that a man would purger himself and risk his life for a woman he believes is too beautiful to have murdered someone, but we are supposed to agree with Lena when she is furious at Phil for not believing she's innocent after all of the mishaps at his house.

The characters are shallow, too. Phil just loves Lena because she's beautiful and Lena expects this. True, Porzikova is beautiful (very beautiful), but that is no reason for Phil not to suspect her. Beauty is only skin deep; so are these characters.

Both Porzikova and Selleck give adequate performances and the movie isn't without its moments. Phil's being shot is very funny (I'm not being ghoulish; it really is amusing), and so is a scene in which Lena gives Phil a haircut he'll never forget.

I hope to see both of these actors in other movies. They both exude so much charm that it's impossible not to like them. Anyone with some time to kill might bother to check out this movie at a matinee, but don't pay full price.

Tune in to the sound of jazz

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

The cheapest and easiest way to expose yourself to jazz is by listening to your radio. While it isn't quite possible to listen to jazz broadcasts 24 hours a day, this area offers a decent amount of jazz-related programming. This week's offering is a guide to such programs. You can hear a wide range of music, as well as dozens of DJ's expounding on it.

As you might expect, most of the stations that carry more than one "token" jazz show per week are based in college or public radio. Some of them have weak signals and/or are far away, so be patient when tuning in:

Valley Jazz

WFCR.....88.5, Amherst (Public Radio)
WGBH.....89.7, Boston (Public Radio)
WAMC.....90.3, Albany, N.Y. (Public Radio)
WTCC.....90.7, Springfield (Springfield Technical Comm. Coll.)
WMUA.....91.1, Amherst (UMass)
WRSI.....95.3, Greenfield (commercial)

Here are the programs broken down by day part:

Mornings: WMUA offers traditional jazz on Tuesdays with Rockin'in Rhythm, and jazz and soul on Fridays with Colors, both from 6 to 9 a.m. From 9 a.m. to noon on all weekdays, the station features an adventurous, eclectic mix on the various shows in its Morning Jazz Block. WTCC offers contemporary jazz on weekdays from 10 a.m. to noon with Mid-morning Jazz.

Evenings: WFCR concentrates on traditional jazz on weekdays with Jazz a la Mode, from 6:30 to 8 p.m. WMUA's All That Jazz features contemporary jazz on Mondays from 7 to 9:30 p.m. If you can get it in, try to listen to the anything-goes mix on Eric in the Evening Mondays through Thursdays, 8:30 to midnight, on WGBH.

Late nights: WTCC plays Great Black Music according to the following schedule: Wednesdays, 10 to midnight; Thursdays, 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. Fridays, midnight to 3 a.m. WAMC offers various jazz-related programs from 11p.m. to 1 a.m. on weeknights, including concert and interview shows as well as more conventional shows of recorded jazz. Some of these shows are repeated on Sunday nights; their focus is generally "conservative".

Weekends: on Saturday nights, WAMC features The Jazz Decades from 10:30 p.m. to midnight, followed by Jazz After Hours until the wee hours of the morning. WTCC plays more Great Black Music on Saturday and Sunday nights from midnight to 3 a.m. WFCR takes a safari into African-influenced musics of the world (jazz, blues, reggae, calypso, African, etc.) from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. WAMC's Sunday night offerings begin at 6:30 p.m. Piano Jazz, in which pianist Marian McPartland interviews and plays with a different pianist each week, airs until 7:30; the American Jazz Radio Festival concert program follows until 9:30. Jazz Revisited (music from the 1940's and before) airs from 9:30 to 10, and Le Jazz Club de Paris, another concert show, goes until 11. WRSI offers Jazz After Hours (not WAMC's show of the same name) from 9:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. The station's regular programming features jazz mixed in with rock, folk, and blues.

Whenever you want to turn on the radio, think about turning on some jazz . . . it will turn you on, too.

A Split Second enough to herald New Beat dance invasion

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

From the Inside
A Split Second
Wax Trax! Records

Going home and blowing a million dollars on compact discs should be enough to satisfy even the most vitriolic of music critics, but I've always been a maveric, so let's press on with another in a series of columns which will hopefully portray my utter disenchantment with 99 of the music available today and home right in on the stuff that I think should be sitting on your record player. And remember - I'm doing this for your benefit! So go out and buy ten copies of each record I review so that the bands will become rich and eventually become bloated sell-outs, just like REM and U2.

Oops, maybe I went just a bit too far with that?

Nah.

The story so far: British music press, deciding that people were becoming entirely too happy as they were, kindly informed us that acid house is dead, and we should now all go out and invest heavily in something called "new beat," which is a type of music that has been around for a long time but never had a name. So, now that there's a name for it, presumably it will enjoy greater popularity. After all, people can't buy something that they can't pigeonhole properly, right?

Anyway, the genre in question is, as I mentioned, called "new beat," and it refers to just about any synthesizer based band from Belgium. All the hard-hitting journalistic investigation I've put into this (read: none) has revealed that you don't have to be from Belgium to fit in this category, but it helps.

A Split Second are from Belgium, but don't hold that against them. The band is Chrismar Chayell on techno-gadgets and Marc Ickx (no, I can't pronounce that either) on vocals and more gadgetry. From a technical standpoint, the music is brilliantly produced with a clever, if not totally innovative, use of the equipment. Ickx speaks English pretty well, but he's got a trace of an accent that can be a bit off-putting.

On tracks like "Bend my Body Armour" and "The Choke" the band creates fairly standard dance-club fare, with some highly danceable rhythms and catchy melodies. However, there are times when this band throws out the textbook dance stuff and heads off in weird directions. "The Last Wave" is built around a looping sample from The Beatles' "Love You To" and drones in a seductive Eastern fashion.

"Colliseum Crash" is a 1960's acid casualty that fell through a timewarp and accidentally materialized in a Front 242 session. The lyrics are enough to send hard men scampering for a nice Madonna record: "'No more human sacrifice,' she said/I'll just have a dry martini/Just let me put my underwear in your computer/And we'll have lots of software babies."

This is why God invented programmable CD players. WIth a flick of the digital remote we can scoot ahead to the relatively more sane pleasures of "Scandinavian Bellydance" and the title track.

There's not much to say about an album like this; you either like it or you don't. It's certainly more accessible than Skinny Puppy or Ministry, but then again, what isn't? A Split Second sounds a bit like Depeche Mode minus the incredible ego trip that seems built into all their latest stuff. Get "...From the Inside" and twist yourself inside-out.

Congress blocks own pay increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Rep. Gerry E. Studds, and Rep. Joseph Early yesterday broke from the overwhelming majority of their colleagues to support the politically explosive 51 percent pay hike for Congress, federal judges, and top government officials.

In the House, the other nine congressmen from Massachusetts helped strike down the pay raise plan 380-48 in the wake of a growing and intense public outcry. In the Senate just a few hours later, Sen. John F. Kerry was among a majority that killed the measure 94-6.

Early, D-Worcester, a strong supporter of the 51 percent pay hike, took to the House floor during the debate to defend his position.

"The responsibility of (being a congressman) is awesome," Early said in an impassioned floor speech. "It is this body that strives to keep the United States out of war."

Early, who noted that he has faced local criticism over his position, said the pay raise was in "the long-range good of the government and should be more important than re-election" considerations. Pay raise supporters had said many opponents privately wanted the pay hike, but were afraid of the political consequences in next year's re-election campaigns.

Kennedy pointed to the need to raise the salaries of federal judges and top-level government officials, who were included in the package that was killed yesterday.

"He would have voted against the pay raise for Congress alone because the 50 percent increase is excessive," said Kennedy spokesman Paul Donovan. But, Donovan said, the senator "feels very strongly about the brain drain that is occurring with judges and scientists and doctors in the federal government."

Donovan pointed to the National Institutes of Health, where he said 28 percent of the senior research staff had quit for private sector jobs in the past decade. During that time, no senior-level scientists had been hired, he said.

"You're not going to win the battle against cancer, you're not going to win the battle against AIDS, if you're not going to put the adequate resources into it. And one of the resources is pay for scientists and doctors," Donovan said.

Cold weather bites nation

(AP) — Idaho National Guard troops yesterday helped rescue livestock stranded by 15-foot snow drifts which have also buried hundreds of other animals, while the nation's deadly cold snap pushed temperatures to record lows in several states.

Some California citrus growers feared the arctic air has caused millions of dollars in crop damage. And in Las Vegas, which dropped to a record low 16 degrees, sheets of ice covered casino fountains and backyard swimming pools.

But Mardi Gras revelers didn't let a little cold stop them. Men in miniskirts pranced through New Orleans' French Quarter in near-freezing weather, as others pitched tents along parade routes.

"I live to just go up and down the street and get my picture taken," said a man in black lace corset, garters and goosebumps, who declined to be identified.

At least 79 deaths have been blamed on the cold weather since Jan. 31, when frigid air blew out of Alaska and into the lower 48 states.

Schools were closed in parts of Alabama, Colorado, Idaho, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oregon, and Texas. Scattered power outages were reported in several states, including Texas, Utah, Colorado, and Mississippi.

Snow fell over parts of New Mexico, Texas, from Northern New York state across northern Ohio, the upper Great Lakes, Minnesota and North Dakota.

Record low temperatures were reported in several cities: Alamosa, Colo., had 30 degrees below zero; Sacramento, Calif., broke a 106-year-old record low for the date with 26 degrees; San Francisco hit 32; and Milford and Vernal, Utah, had their coldest February days ever with minus 29 and minus 38 degrees respectively. Boca Reservoir near Truckee, Calif., was 43 degrees below zero, the coldest February reading ever in California, forecasters said.

In Dubois, Idaho, two dozen National Guard troops used front-end loaders to battle snow drifts up to eight feet tall that have blocked city streets since last week.

Accused terrorist sentenced to 30 years in jail

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An accused international terrorist convicted of transporting bombs through New Jersey was sentenced yesterday to 30 years in prison after renouncing the United States for the "state terrorism" of trying him for bombing Libya in 1986.

US District Judge Alfred J. Lechner Jr. told prosecutors he believed their claims that Yu Kikumura, 36, was a member of the terrorists group the Japanese Red Army and that he plotted to kill US citizens to retaliate for the Libyan bombing.

"There is no other conclusion that can be drawn, but that you are an international terrorist," Lechner said. "There is only one conclusion to draw from the design and construction of the bombs. They were intended and designed for flesh and blood, not for bricks and mortar."

Kikumura told the judge before sentencing that the case against him was a ploy by the US government to justify the bombing of Libya.

"I denounce the government of the US for the legal handling of my case and for using my case to justify the attacks on the country and people of Libya," said Kikumura in heavily accented English.

"I am not linked to Libya. I do not have the background claimed by the United States," he added.

Kikumura said the attacks against Libya violated international law. Kikumura planned to use the bombs to destroy a military recruitment office in the Veteran's Administration building in lower Manhattan, said US Attorney Samuel Alito.

"He's a terrorist and he has been a terrorist," said Alito, arguing that Kikumura's attorney offered no other reason why Kikumura had the three bombs.

Attorney William Kunstler argued that prosecutors offered no firm evidence that his client Kikumura planned to use the bombs.

■ AIDS program

The program serves 40 AIDS patients, two-thirds of which are gay males and one-third IV drug users. New cases, however, are 50 to 60 percent IV drug users, he said.

Izdepski said that it's hard to define what being a buddy is all about. "It's a different experience," he said, "it depends upon whether the patient is really sick, or very healthy."

Buddies may take the AIDS patient to the movies, to lunch or just sit and talk. "It's about listening, a lot of listening," Izdepski said.

"It's a friend for them, but for us it's a little bit more," he said. "We can pick up on problems and relay that information to the Visiting Nurses [Association]."

Reed Ide, director of the program, said, "I believe we're very original because we are part of a home health care team."

Ide said he believes very few organizations in the United States have a Visiting Nurse program and a volunteer support group working together. "We're the only program like this in Massachusetts," he said.

Volunteers are recruited through radio announcements and public speaking, Ide said. However, most volunteers are enlisted by friends who are involved in the support group.

The volunteers attend a 30-hour training program in Springfield before they are assigned a buddy, Ide said. The program has 30 volunteers, but the case load is growing.

"Our greatest need is in the Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee area," he said.

Ide said he plans to expand the program. "We're [writing] a newsletter, and we're looking into an emergency food program in the future," he said.

Izdepski said he is optimistic about the program's future. He said he hopes to see more training programs in the surrounding area so more people can join the support group.

"It's rewarding, you'd think it's all about dying, but it's really about living. Despite the odds, they still laugh at life." Izdepski said.

People wishing to volunteer, Ide said, may call him at The Visiting Nurse Association of Pioneer Valley, 781-5070.

Sanders, mum about the NFL

(AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders refused Tuesday to confirm or deny a report in his hometown newspaper that he decided to return to Oklahoma State University for his senior season instead of opting for the NFL draft.

In Tuesday's editions, the Wichita (Kan.) Eagle-Beacon quoted the 5-foot-8 Sanders as saying: "I'm planning on returning (to Oklahoma State). Right now I'm in school getting ready for next season and some exams."

But in Philadelphia, the Heisman Trophy winner said: "I don't remember saying that. I've done a thousand interviews this year. I can't remember what I say."

"It's my intent to get a degree," he said.

Swimmers top Mount Holyoke

By DEBORAH PICARDI
Collegian Correspondent

In what was the final home meet for the team's six graduating seniors, the University of Massachusetts women's swim team knocked off Five College rival Mount Holyoke, 177-121 last night at Boyden Pool.

The UMass women's swimming team edged out Mt. Holyoke at Boyden Pool last night in the final dual meet of the year.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb used the meet as an opportunity to give his seniors the chance to swim their final laps at home and also give some experience to the rest of his team in some different events.

Swimming their final races in Boyden were seniors Regina Jungbluth, Lori Carroll, Melissa Waller, Megan McCamy and co-captains Patty Pike and Debbie Mullen. The six were each given flowers before the start of the meet.

Mullen swept first place on both the one- and three-meter diving boards, while Jungbluth, McCamy and Pike each took home a first. The three also teamed up with Carroll for third in the 400 freestyle relay.

But there were several other firsts, with some new faces getting their feet wet, so to speak. UMass started the meet with first and third in the medley relay and rolled in from there, winning all but four events.

Tonia Stafford and Jodi Schwartz took 1-2 in the 1000-yard freestyle, followed by a first by Tracy Young in the 200 free (2:02.02). Next was a sweep of the 100-yard backstroke, led by McCamy in 1:10.12 with Lynn Armstrong and Kim Morin completing the sweep.

Jungbluth was a clear winner in the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:11.82, as was Michelle Leary in the 200-yard butterfly. Leary also led a sweep of the 200 breast in 2:39.13, with Morin and Melissa McCarthy rounding it out.

Other firsts in the meet went to Pike in the 100 fly (1:05.38) and Keira Cruz in the 50 free (26.38). Freshman Theresa Jacobs picked up two seconds and a third. Schwartz had two seconds and Amy Bloomstein finished third in the 100 free.

The win wound up the team's dual meet schedule with a record of 8-4. The Minutewomen, who have been training hard of late, will get a chance to rest before heading into the New England Championships, which will be held Feb. 17-19 at Holy Cross in Worcester.

Collegian staff member Jim Clark contributed to this story.

Men's gymnastics team stops So.Conn.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Taking a quick glance at last night's stat sheet from the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team's meet at Southern Connecticut, one might be led to believe that the Minutemen were on the short end of the score.

UMass failed to capture first place in a single event. But as any coach will preach, depth is always a tremendous advantage to have on your side. Last night, the Minutemen utilized the depth that they had in shooting down the host Owls, 259.40-255.80 in New Haven, Conn.

Southern Connecticut had a tough top three, according to UMass coach Roy Johnson, and the trio of Carlton Noble, Pat Rashed and Shawn Simpson were able to sweep away all of the top spots in the meet. However, the Minutemen took care of things from there, winning for only the second time against Southern Connecticut in about 20 years.

Coming off of a tough weekend loss at Cortland, it was important for UMass to rebound in this Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League match-up. One of the sore spots against Cortland was in the pommel horse, but this time around the Minutemen were able to turn it to their advantage.

"The pommel horse was the difference," said Johnson. "It was much better than at Cortland. The big thing was six guys all hit their routines without a major break."

The pommel performance was much needed, especially after the Southern Conn. brawn had pretty much dominated the first event, the floor exercise. Senior Tim Myers picked up second with a score of 8.85 with freshman Cal Booker close behind in third at 8.75.

UMass also got second and third in the still rings, powered by a pair of personal bests. Carl Russ scored a 9.45 for second and co-captain John Eggers was third in a high of 9.4.

Eggers also scored high in the vault, tying for third with a mark of 9.05.

And although there were no highlights from the parallel bars and horizontal bar, UMass still had enough to knock off the Owls.

"They had three outstanding gymnasts, but we had more depth," Johnson said.

Myers would finish third in the all-around competition, scoring a total of 53.1, and Booker was fifth overall at 51.25. Roberto Weil rounded out the scoring with 50.05.

With the victory, UMass improves its record to 3-2 on the year, including 2-1 in the EIGL. More importantly, the victory puts the Minutemen in good shape for the postseason down the road. Johnson had said before the meet that the team could go into the league meet in second place (behind the Naval Academy) with a win, and now it is in position to do just that.

But first, there are other things in the more immediate future. Following a trip to Boston to face M.I.T. this Saturday, UMass, which has been a virtual traveling road show all season, will finally get its first home meet of the year on Feb. 18 against Temple.

"We're looking forward to Temple, because it's a league meet and it's also our first home meet," Johnson said.

Starting with that meet, UMass will be in the cozy confines of Boyden for four straight, hosting Army and Air Force on Feb. 25, Syracuse on Mar. 4 and Springfield on Mar. 11. The EIGL meet will be held Mar. 17-19 at Syracuse.

Who's No. 1? Who knows

I'm going out on a limb. Even UMass might have a chance to be number one this year.

Okay, stop laughing. I was only kidding. No, really. Stop. That's enough.

Then again, maybe it's not such a far-fetched notion after all. It doesn't seem like any other team in the country wants the honor of being considered the top team in the country.

Jim Clark

When the Associated Press Top 20 poll was released Monday, it revealed that for the fourth week in a row, there was a new resident in the penthouse of college hoops. The University of Arizona gets the nod this week, and thus is now the team on the hot seat, ready to take a stumble sometime later this week.

Now maybe that's not true. But thus has been the latest trend. Duke University, considered by most everybody to be the top team in the land in the preseason, held the spot for the first nine weeks of the year, before falling to the University of North Carolina (hooray) and, ultimately, falling off the edge. The Blue Devils proceeded to lose three straight, proving that no poll is indeed an accurate portrayal.

Next it was Illinois, whose ascension to the top marked the first time the Illini had reached that height in 37 years. That turned out to be a mere spin around the block, as well, as the Golden Gophers of Minnesota put them in their place.

With Illinois' loss, it seemed that Georgetown (ugh) was primed to move up before frosh sensation Chris Jackson torched the Hoyas in front of the largest college hoops crowd ever, in the Louisiana Superdome. Louisville was next in line to the throne, and needed just a win the next afternoon to take over. Alas, it too fell by the wayside.

By default, Oklahoma took a leap and a bound to the top spot, and needed just a win over state rival Oklahoma State to keep it. But the Sooners, a virtual scoring machine, were held to just 72 points and the Cowboys roped Billy Tubbs' bragging rights.

Georgetown and North Carolina were close behind in the waiting, but they too tripped. Which brings us to Arizona, no slouch to say the least. Final Four participants last year, and top spot holders for six weeks before Temple took over for the rest of the year, the 'Cats are legitimate with All-America forward Sean Elliott and a talented supporting cast.

The question is, can they keep it up? Or will the spinning whir of the NCAA merry-go-round send them flying and open the gates to yet another long line of eager beavers who would like to be number one?

Clearly, taking the pieces of this puzzle and putting them together spells 'parody.' Ask anyone who the real top team is in the country, and you can get several valid answers. Michigan? Maybe the best starting five, but does that make a case for Alaska-Anchorage, the Division II two that clipped the Wolves in the Utah Classic?

How about Missouri? Or even Marist? Murray State? Morehead State? Massachusetts . . .?

Simply put, there really is no number one team. It doesn't add any consistency to the proceedings, but it does make things interesting. And with that, the NCAA Tournament, the three weeks of March Madness that declares the real number one team, should be pretty interesting if this trend holds up, especially where nearly every team has a shot via all-inclusive league tournaments for automatic bids.

So stay tuned, no matter which team you root for. Who knows what may happen over the next two months.

UMass skiers battle the elements at Terry Mt.

By ROBERT SIMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

"It was a kind of survival thing." That's how coach Bill MacConnell described the crazy weekend of the UMass men's and women's ski teams.

The teams competed at Tenny Mountain in Plymouth, N.H. this past Saturday and Sunday, in weather that MacConnell described as extremely cold and windy. The weather had the effect of a good Saturday for UMass, including a first place finish for the men's team, but a not-so-good Sunday for either group.

The women did well in the slalom on Saturday, getting second place for the day with a total time of 282.13 seconds for their best three skiers. Host Plymouth State gained first with a time of 279.32.

Marcy Blacker was tops for UMass, finishing fifth with a time of 89.31 seconds. Other finishers for the Minutewomen were Denise Duffy (seventh), Mary Sinton (ninth), and Marti Gilbert (10th). Delores Poodts of BC had the best individual time of 85.02 seconds.

In the men's slalom on Saturday, John Roche of UMass was the winner with a time of 75.95. Next for the Minutemen were Rick D'Elia (sixth), Charlie Holcombe (10th), and John Donovan (12th). UMass had the best total time for their top five at 396.91. Plymouth St. captured second with 399.89 and Boston College was third with 404.94.

On Sunday the weather conditions effected UMass, as the women finished seventh with a team time of 309.78. BC came back from a rough Saturday to take first in 238.68. BC's Poodts was again the winner in a time of 79.08. Duffy finished 11th in 86.17.

Both Roche and D'Elia fell on their runs during Sunday, and weren't factors as they were the previous day, but UMass was still able to grab third because of team depth, with a total time of 387.73. Plymouth St. notched first with a 369.44. Mike Hannigan had the best time for UMass with 75.37 and 11th place. Next for UMass were Donovan (12th), Loren Coburn (15th), and John Cohen (19th). Aaron Loukes of Plymouth was first in 72.83.

MacConnell was satisfied with his teams' performances considering the harsh weather, and hopes the past weekend will prepare UMass for this weekend's competition at Loon Mountain.

In the overall standings, both the men and women are third, and with the season at its midpoint, the UMass ski teams need solid performances for the remainder of the season in order to finish this year at the top, according to MacConnell.

Short circuit threatens area power

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A short circuit that caused the entire computer system at Whitmore Administration building to crash on registration day has left power in several buildings and the Southwest residential area hanging by a thread.

There are usually two cables that supply power to Whitmore, Southwest, Tobin Hall and Boyden Gymnasium, but now only one 13,800-volt cable is left to carry the system, said Physical Plant electrical systems supervisor John Ghidinelli.

Ghidinelli said the damaged cable is being repaired and should be installed by the end of this week, but all areas are vulnerable to a second power failure at any time.

Director of Operations Peter Wozniak said a second power failure is not likely, but added that "anything's possible."

"If that circuit should trip, all the buildings that are on it will lose power, possibly for a long time," he said.

The result of a second power loss will have a dramatic effect on students, especially because offices in Whitmore will be unable to function, said Martin Smith, director of data processing.

It won't happen during intersession or during the summer," he said. "It will happen when you least want it and we have no control over that."

When the cable failed on registration day, Smith said, computer power was not fully restored until 10:30 a.m., although students began forming lines at 6:30 a.m.

Another abrupt cable failure could seriously damage the systems because it leaves no opportunity for the computers to "power down," Smith said.

"It's just like if you're going 60 mph down a highway and suddenly your car stops," he said.

Smith said computer damage and record loss could be prevented if the University invests in a $150,000 uninterrupted power supply system.

In case of an electrical failure, he said, the uninterrupted system would provide 10 to 15 minutes of power to allow operators to close the system slowly.

A proposal to bring the system to the University has been brought before the Board of Regents, but Smith said it is unlikely to be approved because of the state's fiscal situation.

"We're very vulnerable because almost every department has computer systems," he said. "If the system were down, it would be chaotic."

Additional cuts and layoffs likely for Cooley Dickinson

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — Cooley Dickinson Hospital officials have announced plans to lay off up to 63 employees, cut the hours of 15 others and eliminate 30 vacant positions to reverse losses of $1 million over three months.

Hospital President Craig N. Melin said, however, that some of the laid-off workers could be hired back in 25 new positions that are being created to make staffing more efficient and do away with overlapping jobs.

"We don't know the answer to that today," Melin said Tuesday when asked how many employees would be hired back. The hospital has 870 employees.

Hospital trustees approved the layoffs at a meeting Monday. Among those notified Tuesday that they had lost their jobs were 14 managers.

In January, Melin announced a temporary freeze on salaries, wages and benefits, construction projects and major equipment purchases. The cost-saving measures came after the hospital lost $1 million in the first quarter of its current fiscal year, which began in October, and more than $1 million in each of the the last two years.

Melin attributed the losses to a decline in patient volume, an increase in expenses and insufficient reimbursement from insurance and programs such as Medicare and Medicaid.

He said savings from the freezes were not enough to make up for the losses and he called the layoffs a "last, but in this case, necessary step" that he hoped would save $1.7 million annually in salaries and wages.

"I'm just completely devastated by it," an employee who was laid off told the Daily Hampshire Gazette. "I have a family, a son in college."

Children's TV: networks sacrifice quality for ratings

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Children's television programming does not help children learn about the world because networks are more interested in making profits, says psychology professor Daniel Anderson at the University of Massachusetts.

"Right now, the networks don't ask for anything except what gets the largest audience and that's all they care about," he said.

Anderson, a recognized expert on children's television and its effects, said the cause of this problem is the major debt all the networks are in and because of competition from independent stations.

The networks used to have censors, Anderson said, who would check children's shows before they were aired, but these people have been let go by the networks.

"[This] is a good sign that the networks are loosening their standards substantially," he said.

Because of this, a network executive recently told Anderson to watch for more sex and violence in children's programming in the future, Anderson said.

He said the networks use three criteria — audience size, production costs and objections of parents — for deciding whether to air or continue to air a show.

There are no requirements that children's shows have any educational value or standards, he said, although there is a bill before Congress to guarantee a certain amount of quality programming for children.

"In order to get large audiences," Anderson said, "there will be a large temptation for programs to get more risque."

Advertisers subscribe to this formula as well, Anderson pointed out.

About three years ago, he said, a TV soda advertisement showed a boy skateboarding down a busy street backward, wearing a walk-man and drinking the company's product.

"That," said Anderson, "is the recipe for a dead child."

Without anyone to check program content, more and more of this type of thing will be seen on children's shows, he said.

"It's very clear that about 50 percent of what school-age children watch on television is not produced for children," Anderson said.

"It is absolutely essential that parents control what children watch," because children have no way to judge what they see on television for moral content, he said.

That is not to say that television makes

Filibusters prevent vote on presidency

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The only thing that's changed about the Student Government Association this semester is the year.

Continuing their 1988 practices, conservative senators clogged last night's 3-hour meeting with filibustering, which some senators saw as an attempt to prevent a vote to ratify the March 15 election of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as SGA co-presidents.

The uproar began immediately when Sen. Lisa Lupo introduced a "last minute" motion to condemn The Minuteman, a conservative student newspaper, for its last issue, which Lupo said was full of "homophobic and heterosexist remarks."

Lupo said the paper "overstepped the bounds of responsible journalism with its attacks against homosexuals, and the staff of the Minuteman engaged in harassing behavior towards suggested homosexuals."

Several senators speculated that Lupo, a Minuteman staff member, sponsored the motion as part of a conservative stall tactic to avoid a vote to ratify the March 15 election of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as SGA co-presidents.

Lupo, however, maintains her efforts are sincere and "out of love for The Minuteman."

But Sen. Bob McDevitt said, "The whole Minuteman motion is a stalling tactic," to prevent the motion for Silkoff and Rabinowitz from reaching the floor.

Sen. Tim Smith said of the uproar: "It seems pretty typical. They're trying to slow things down."

Sen. Brian Darling said several days ago that he would filibuster to prevent the senate from voting on ratifying the "unconstitutional" election, but last night he laughed and refused to comment on the basis for his actions.

Senators Darling and W. Greg Rothman requested two calls for quorum, five roll call votes, three motions to appeal the ruling of the chair, two motions to recess, two calls for division of assembly and one motion to adjourn.

Sen. Traci Davis said, "Once again the conservative faction of the senate has shown contempt for the students and their issues.

"The faction, led by W. Greg Rothman, has continued to use dilatory tactics to make sure that nothing is done in the senate," she said.

The filibustering occupied most of the meeting time, but Speaker Robert Fadel was able to use the last 10 minutes of the meeting to win unanimous approval to transfer $30,000 from UPC/SATF for spring concerts and $650 to Residential Arts for advertising.

Also passed was a motion to place the election of SGA speaker and SGA Treasurer as a priority item on the March 15 agenda.

Two motions to restructure SGA voting districts in residential and commuter areas were tabled for one week, and a proposal to require a one-tenth vote of the senate to order a roll-call vote was tabled for four weeks.

Fire calls from UMass down

The Division of Environmental Health and Safety has reported a 20 percent drop in fire-related responses since last July.

The Amherst Fire Department responded 73 times from July 1 to Dec. 31 to calls at University of Massachusetts residence areas. This is the lowest response activity since 1977, said Keith Hoyle, Senior Fire Prevention Officer.

"None of the fires were serious," Hoyle said. "In fact, the most severe incidents occurred in Resident Director apartments." Three of the eight fires reported were in RD apartments.

Hoyle said the total number of malicious false fire alarms decreased from 54 to 35, but that category still accounts for over 50 percent of all alarms. Two of the 35 false alarms resulted in the identification of the perpetrator by a resident, making the resident eligible for the $500 reward offered by Housing Services.

Hoyle said all residence hall fire alarm systems, emergency lights, fire extinguishers and room smoke detectors were checked over intersession and were operational.

Senate allocates funds

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

In its first meeting of the semester Wednesday night, the Graduate Student Senate allocated $1,275 to campus organizations and a charity and planned support for the University's budget battles.

The senate had harsh words for Chancellor Joseph Duffey's handling of University appropriations from the state, saying he has not been direct enough in requesting the necessary funds to restore the University's operating budget.

The senate approved a proposal to give the organizers of the "Run for Ritter" charity race $300 for promotional expenses. All monies raised by the race are to be donated to Covenant House in New York City, a home for run-aways.

The senate also granted:

- $200 to the UMass Hang Gliding Club for major equipment purchases and maintainance.
- $300 to help send two members of Graduate Employees Organization to a collective bargaining conference in Miami, Florida on the condition that the members give a workshop on what was learned.
- $300 to help bring a vice rector of the University of El Salvador to speak on campus about conditions at that University.

Two cars damaged in collision

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Two vehicles collided Tuesday on Massachusetts Avenue causing a total of $6,000 damage to both of the cars involved, police said.

The first car was travelling west on the avenue when a second car attempted to cross the road, striking the first vehicle when doing so. The operator of the second car was cited for failure to use caution before entering traffic, police said.

In other police reports:

- A student reported a total of $4,250 worth of merchandise stolen from his car parked in Lot 34 Monday. Among the items missing were an IBM computer, a compact disc player and 20 discs, a quantity of computer software and a camera, police said.
- Police said three students reported Monday their car windows had been smashed while in E Lot.
- Forty-five music stands worth $250 were reported stolen from the Fine Arts Center Monday.
- A student reported Monday the window of his car had been smashed while in Lot 44.
- A student reported her license plate stolen from her vehicle parked in Lot 22 Tuesday.
- A 21-year-old Springfield man was arrested on an outstanding warrant for violation of probation Tuesday, police said.
- A resident of South East Street reported that his 1 1/2-year-old Samoyed dog was stolen from his yard sometime on Monday.

Library tour offered by tower staff

By ALETHEA O'DONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

To counter the impression that the University's Tower Library is overwhelming, the library's reference department is offering tours to familiarize students with the 26-floor building.

Paula Mark, director of the program, said students have found the tours to be informative. "We encourage students to speak up and ask questions. The tours make people feel more at ease in the library, and make it clearer where to place the questions," she said.

Staff at the Tower Library are giving tours aimed at familiarizing students with the vast resources available there.

"People have an image that any library should be accessible, but then they take the library for granted," she said.

Jaleh Shafa, a junior, said, "Even though the library is scary at first, you get used to it. Taking a tour can help you learn some shortcuts."

Dina Ferreiha, a student from Cape Verde, off the coast of Africa, has recently arrived at UMass to pursue her Master's Degree in eucation. "I took the tour to better know this place, as it will be my place to study."

"I think that it is very important to know how to use this huge library, and the tours are good because it becomes easier to use the library system," she said.

The library tours include a tour of the card catalog area, the Five College on-line computer, and the microfilm machines. The tours, which are offered at the beginning of each semester, will be running through the end of this week. Tours begin in the library lobby at 10:30 a.m., and 1:30 and 2:30 p.m.

House concerned about health care insurance law

BOSTON (AP) — Members of the House Ways and Means committee yesterday questioned the director of the agency charged with implementing the new universal health care law on whether the minimum insurance requirement for businesses in 1992 will be sufficient.

Under the new health care law, most employers will be required by 1992 either to provide health plans costing at least $1,680 a year per employee or pay that amount in a surtax to the state to provide the coverage.

During fiscal 1990 budget hearings, Ways and Means member Michael Ruane told Medical Security Commissioner James Hooley that he is personally paying almost $7,000 a year for Blue Cross — Blue Shield coverage for himself and his wife.

Considering the cost of his own insurance, the Salem Democrat asked, "What can a family get for $1,680 in 1992 when the medical rates have gone up by 300 percent in the last 5½ years? I maintain the $1,680 in 1992 isn't going to let you get a splinter removed."

Hooley, who is responsible for putting Gov. Michael s. Dukakis' highly touted health care program into effect, said the $1,680 figure stipulated in the law is under review.

While Hooley said he believes the $1,680 requirement will allow businesses to "purchase a basic health insurance plan for people in 1992," he added that "phase-in programs that we are initiating will test that out, beginning this summer."

"In addition, that $1,680 relates to the employer's contribution. We also expect that the individuals will make a contribution to the premium as well," he said, without elaborating.

Under questioning from Rep. Kenneth Lemanski, D-Chicopee, Hooley said preliminary research indicates $1,680 "is pretty close in terms of what people are paying now" in the western part of the state but "may be a low amount of money in terms of this part of the state."

Ruane said he raised the issue because of concerns from small businesses about their obligations under the law and the still unanswered question of how much the health care bill ultimately will cost.

Hooley said he is meeting with business groups to allay fears, informing them of the law's exemptions for small businesses, tax breaks for those beginning insurance programs and a state-supported hardship trust fund to help them meet health insurance costs.

He also noted that the state is scheduled late this year to set up a pooled insurance program through which small businesses could buy insurance coverage more cheaply than on their own.

Tower findings warrant concern

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Correspondent

The controversy surrounding Secretary of Defense-designate John Tower is fueled by information the public should be aware of, agreed several University of Massachusetts political science professors.

A US Senate vote on Tower's confirmation has been delayed pending a second FBI investigation into Tower's past career and personal actions.

George Sulzner, chairman of the political science department, said the issue that concerns him most is Tower's former position as a paid consultant to defense contractors. Tower was the former chairman of the Senate's Armed Forces Committee, but is also known for advocating large defense spending, he said.

"There is much concern over whether he might put himself in a compromising position due to his background," Sulzner said.

According to Sulzner, "Secretary of Defense is one of the highest political positions in the country. The person in this position has to have higher standards because there is a greater consequence of his actions."

Tower has also been dogged by reports that he has been seen in public in an inebriated condition, and accompanied by women other than his wife.

"In politics, people's private lives become public records," said political science professor Jerome Mileur. "The headlines are sensational but the underlying information is pertinent."

Sulzner said he has mixed feelings on the Tower controversy. "I do not find his personal life directly relevant, although the concerns are legitimate," he said.

Although Tower's experience is substantial, there are other factors that go beyond the resume, Sulzner said.

Sulzner said the recent trend of the press is to exploit politicians at the cost of their careers. "I think perhaps it is a reaction to corruption of the past, such as Watergate. There is a very difficult conflict of interest regarding Tower," he said.

"There is a fine line between relevant moral information about his personal life and exploitation," Sulzner added. "This information about Tower is fairly relevant because in a position so important, he cannot have any hesitation."

children stupid, "but that doesn't mean young children are good judges of what they see," he said.

"In the old days children learned moral values in the evening when grown-ups would sit around and have open discussions or through stories that were told," he said.

But today, because parents spend much less time with their children than they used to, TV has taken up the role of teacher in many areas of a child's development, Anderson said.

"The important message here," says Anderson, "is that television is not neutral. It's not like watching the rain come down."

"I'd like to see programs with child actors in which children are presented with real life situations that children face" like how to phone for help, deal with a bully and death of a pet for example, Anderson said.

Anderson asserts that the networks could heed this message because some research has shown that children are very attentive to other children on television.

"I think programs like that would be very popular with children," he said.

Anderson has two suggestions for improving the condition of children's programing:

- Set standards requiring a show to have a certain amount of educational content of some kind.
- Involve an expert on child development in the writing of every show in order to eliminate dangerous things such as showing a child with a trash can over his head.

"Wisdom has to be put in at the production end of television," Anderson said.

Trooper testifies in murder trial

SPRINGFIELD, (AP) — A woman on trial on charges of murdering her husband told police that the men she allegedly hired to kill him were only supposed to hurt him, a state trooper testified.

"I don't believe a damn thing you're telling me," the trooper, John M. Cauley, said he told Lisa Becker-Grimshaw while questioning her on the death of her husband, Thomas Grimshaw.

The 27-year-old woman on trial in Hampden Superior Court dabbed her eyes Tuesday while the trooper read statements he said she gave to police following the slaying.

She has pleaded innocent to the contract killing of her husband, whose body was found near a Chicopee boat ramp on June 5, 1985. Nancy Gertner, her attorney, does not deny her client's involvement in the crime, but claims Becker-Grimshaw was a battered woman who believed her life was in danger and acted in self-defense.

Her alleged love, Michael Bruyette, is serving a life term for second-degree murder. Another man, Michael Ashey, who was 16 years old at the time of the killing pleaded guilty to murder in juvenile court but was released when he turned 19.

Ashey testified Tuesday that he helped beat Grimshaw because the defendant offered to split his $300,000 life insurance policy with him and Bruyette.

"She said she wanted him dead. ... He had life insurance. She wanted to get the money. She said she would give it to Mike and me... and herself," Ashey testified.

Anti-violence force proposed

TURNERS FALLS (AP) — A selectman has proposed this little Connecticut Valley village of 5,700 people establish a task force on ways to prevent domestic violence following the slaying of three women in 18 months.

Clarkson Edwards, chairman of the town selectmen, said he proposed the task force, composed of police, clergy, school officials and others, because he feels the community has a responsibility to try to find out if there are underlying causes.

Police Chief Michael Daharceski said community concern has been heightened because the killings were the first homicides in the little village in the past century.

The chief, who supports the task force, said yesterday that there has been no recent increase in reported assaults on women or links among the cases other than they "all involved two people who had known each other and had intimate relations, and somewhere along the line there was a falling out and the male took it upon himself to do in the woman."

"Our streets are safe to walk. These crimes couldn't have been prevented if we had a police officer on every street corner," the chief said. "But maybe over a period of time with the involvement of educators we can teach kids and adults that violence isn't the answer."

The latest victim was 16-year-old Catherine Grochinski. Her 18-year-old boyfriend, Joseph Demers Jr., has pleaded innocent to her murder. Police allege that he shot her once in the chest late Friday night in the apartment they had shared with his sister for the past month.

State Trooper Leonard Crossman, who is assigned to the district attorney's office, said investigators believe jealousy may have been the motive.

On Sept. 10, Virginia Ferrer, 27, was stabbed to death in an alley behind her home. Arrested at the scene was Alan Jose Reyes, 32. Police said Reyes had been the father of four of her five children and the two had recently resumed their relationship. Relatives maintained that the two had squabbled over her estranged husband's visiting rights with her youngest daughter, who was his child.

Workers at a shelter for battered women in Northampton said Ferrer had stayed at the shelter for several months in 1987 before moving to Turners Falls.

Nine women wearing black stocking masks and chanting "We will avenge Virginia's death" disrupted Reyes arraignment. They declined to give their names or any further explanation after they were escorted from the courtroom.

And in September 1987, Vivian Morrissey, 31, was found strangled in her home. Her former boyfriend Gregory Martino of Greenfield was convicted of her murder in October and sentenced to life in prison.

WBZ pulls controversial ad

BOSTON (AP) — Objections from listeners in this heavily Catholic city prompted one local radio station to pull a frozen seafood dinner commercial featuring what is ostensibly a Roman Catholic nun confessing to a priest.

"On a personal level, I felt it was a very creative commercial," said Tyler jCox, program manager at WBZ-AM, which pulled the ad last week after only several plays.

Cox said a moderate number of listeners called the station, which has a primary audience between the ages of 40 and 50, and were quite vocal in insisting the commercial be pulled off the air.

"There's a very large Catholic base in Boston, which makes up a sizeable percentage of our listening audience," Cox said.

The 30-second spot for Booth Seafood Products' frozen entrees is entitled "Confession" and debuted nationally Jan. 23. It has aired on 11 Boston radio stations.

"We did not, definitely, try to single out Catholics, or in any way demean the Catholic religion," said Michael Yurchesyn, marketing manager for National Sea Products Inc. and its Booth subsidiary.

"We got one or two complaints from Denver and Kansas City," he said, "but I think we got more complaints in the Boston area than anywhere else."

In part of the commercial, "Sister Catherine" confesses to "Father Callahan" that she has "gone back to eating fish on Friday.

"We stopped that in the '60s," "Father Callahan" says.

"But Booth frozen seafood is so good."

"Do you find frozen seafood tempting, sister?"

Yurchesyn and Paul Klein of North Castle Partners, the Stamford, Conn., agency that created the commercial, said preliminary market research predicted possible backlash.

Teen conquering scientific world

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — As thousands of teen-agers across the country struggle with the complexities of basic algebra, Harvard and several other universities are wooing a 17-year-old girl from England to continue her research on such subjects as quantum groups and statistical mechanics.

Ruth J. Lawrence, of Oxford England, at age 17 is manipulating some of the most complex concepts in mathematics. Her work has taken her to the outer fringes of theoretical physics and mathematics, such subjects as knot and string theory, and the connections between the world of particle physics and mathematics.

She entered Oxford University six years ago and by age 13 had her degree. Today she is working toward completion of her doctorate and has long since caught the attention of top mathematicians around the world.

Lawrence has already taught students at Oxford on a tutorial basis. If she accepts a position at an American university it will be mainly to conduct research. But she said she might lead a seminar or deliver an occasional lecture. In addition to Harvard and Berkeley, Princeton's Institute for Advance Study is interested in bringing Lawrence in for a year.

It all began not in some exclusive British school but in Lawrence's own home in Oxford, where her father, Harry, a computer consultant, gave Ruth her entire pre-Oxford education.

"I was always dealing with adults so when I got to Oxford I fitted into the atmosphere... He didn't use any textbooks. He taught totally himself," she said yesterday while visiting Harvard with her father.

Lawrence got top scores on her Oxford entrance exam. It was at that point, her father said, "it was obvious to me that she was a little better than most."

Once at Oxford, Lawrence studied under Sir Michael Atiyah, Royal Society Research Professor at Oxford and "one of the great mathematicians of the world," according to John Addison, chairman of the mathematics department at the University of California at Berkeley, one of the schools recruiting Lawrence.

Lawrence seems to have taken her rapid rise in stride. She is much more interested in talking about the vast unknown in the world of mathematics than dwelling on her accomplishments.

"When I was taught mathematics in the beginning I was interested in it. I just liked it. I didn't think it was anything special," Lawrence said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

We need dignity to overcome poverty

Imagine that one day you wake up and find yourself sweating at some menial job for minimum wage and that you when you come home you're living in some roach infested shack. Imagine that your children are being processed through an educational system like hamburger is forced through a meat grinder. Imagine that every Christmas, you have to explain to your little boy that Santa Claus was too sick again this year to come to your neighborhood — when the sad truth is that you've barely sweated enough to put food on the table, a food whose quality is so horrible that even maggots aren't interested.

Dino Privitera

Imagining is the closest that most of us will ever come to such a future, but for people who are imprisoned behind the invisible walls of ghettos such as Liberty City and Overtown, Miami. This reality will rip self-dignity from people. Self-dignity isn't simply taken from a person with one mighty stroke of a magic wand, instead it is gnawed at day in and day out. Self-dignity is bitten off piece by piece. This scenario that I have provided is a situation that only the very lucky get to experience in the ghetto, for the majority of people in the ghetto, food, jobs and whole families take a backseat to drugs, unemployment and broken homes.

The difficulties with addressing the injustices that manifest themselves in the ghetto can be seen in the way society chooses to deal with other problems. We have now embarked on an age when problems are solved by pressing a button or by swallowing a pill. We need instantaneous results. The problem of Liberty City and Overtown, Miami are immense, but they are far from insurmountable, nor are they instantaneous. Ghettos are no different than quicksand and the ghetto will swallow you up. It is up to those not in quicksand to help those who have fallen in it. Help must be given or else in the end, we will all be swallowed up.

The help that I'm talking about comes in the form of dignity. The only way to restore it is to eliminate the process that removed it in the first place. People in Overtown, Liberty City and all ghettos must be given the opportunity to receive a quality education, an education that will prepare them for life. A viable source of help must come from this country's leadership. There must be a radical re-evaluation of this government's priorities. I ask you to consider the cost and importance of having the capacity to destroy the Earth fifty times over as compared to the importance of alleviating the everyday suffering of the people. Millions of us are so overwhelmed by a football game and a $30 million inauguration.

Here in our comfortable little bubble at UMass, where add/drop is our greatest frustration, we can't even begin to understand the degree of frustration that would drive people to burn down their community. Try to understand the motivations that led to the Miami riots. United, there is nothing that people can not accomplish. Together, we can put a man on the moon and together we will put clothes on backs, food in mouths and hope in hearts. All it takes is the courage for everyone to say that there will be no injustices in the world today.

If MLK taught us anything, he taught us that every person, no matter what color, has dignity, and with dignity comes rights that all human beings are entitled to. Like equality, not merely a social plane, but it is on an economic and political one also. I don't seek to justify the riots in Miami, I simply urge people to consider its roots. Wake up America, our streets are burning, and the only thing that can extinguish the fires of frustration is self-dignity.

Unity? We've got a long way to go

Unity. Unity. Unity. All the world wants to be unified. It's such a quaint concept. Everyone lives together in peace and harmony. Everyone is unified in a struggle against bigotry. It doesn't matter that we are total strangers, in fact, that makes it quite beautiful. It sounds beautiful, doesn't it? Strangers from totally different backgrounds magically unite and feel an immediate affinity for each other.

Pamela McCarthy

Unfortunately, this is real life.

I'm not saying that our lofty concept of unity is bad. It's constructive, well-meaning, and (ideally) it doesn't point fingers of accusation and blame. It doesn't scapegoat. It also doesn't recognize one tiny fact about human nature. We can't unify out of the blue. It takes effort and work. Anyone who wants to do this had better be patient, because it won't happen overnight. We have to unlearn many things. The first thing is not the most obvious. It isn't bigotry we must overcome first, it's self-deception.

Let's be unmercifully honest with ourselves. We're ignoring the real problem as we preach unity. We are trying to convince ourselves we aren't bigoted. We can't stand to admit that we are not as politically perfect as we want to be.

I can't pretend to know what it's like to be African-American, or Hispanic, or Latina, or Asian. I come from a very white, Catholic town. I come from a Euro-American backround. I make whitewash look tan. I can't pretend to know what it's like to face such problems. It's a little arrogant of me to assume that I know all there is to know about a different group, and how to deal with members of that group.

When people from different cultures and backgrounds get together, it becomes painfully obvious how different we are. When you know that you're different from someone, it makes you uncomfortable. Don't tell me it doesn't, I don't buy it. It's human nature.

So many of the same people who talk about unity will make remarks or level accusations at Afro-Americans, Jews, Asians, or some other group. I saw an example at the Farrakhan fiasco. It was in the form of a progressive (ha!) sign that said: Jews support the NAACP, blacks support Farrakhan and anti-Semitism. The bozo who so proudly displayed that sign was dividing more than unifying, by following in the footsteps of Hitler, Stalin, and McCarthy (stop those comments right now, people).

I realized what a clever little plan it was: this group is bad because it causes problems in attaining unity! Yes, you too can use a group of people as a scapegoat, and still look like a good little liberal.

Most of my Jewish friends were angry and embarrassed over that sign. Many of them felt that everything they stood for was being attacked. In fact, many felt that all they worked for was being dismissed. Forget unity, because we are good and they are bad. This attitude didn't sit very well with them.

And hey, who says this concept of unity is any fun? It's something you work for. It's achieved, it doesn't just happen. You face some painful truths about yourself. You work to understand others. You don't spout off pretty political idioms, you don't preach and wag your finger at naughty, uncooperative people. You actually try to understand where others are coming from. You admit to them that you have prejudices.

Throwing bombs, marching, holding rallies, and participating in the UMass shout-a-thon for a cause may be exciting. It's violent and in a sick way, fun. It's quick and easy; no one has to think. It's an easy way out. It's a release, not a solution. Before we can be united with anyone, we've got to face the fact that we all have some degree of bigotry within ourselves. We've got to be willing to work on it. Maybe unity would work if we simply admitted this to each other. But from what I've seen, too many people are too afraid — or arrogant — to face it.

There is no place for homophobia

In the spirit of our community's effort at fostering a climate of civility and a resulting tolerance and appreciation of diversity, it is imperative that we confront any expression of hatred or intolerance on our campus. The most recent issue of the Minuteman contains numerous explicit and implicit homophobic remarks as well as a photograph and a puzzle directing derision and implied encouragement of violence towards gays and lesbians in general and at one student gay rights activist in particular.

The Feb. 1989 issue of the Minuteman contains numerous references connoting intolerance of gays and lesbians, including "homosexual deviants," "homo," and "trash on the fourth floor" (all on page six). There is also a puzzle entitled "Diversity Word Find" on page eight. It includes such homophobic slurs as "F-U-D-G-E-P-A-K-E-R," "H-O-M-O," "F-A-G," "Q-U-E-E-R," "F-A-I-R-Y," "D-Y-K-E," and "D-E-V-I-A-N-T" In the same puzzle are the adjacent words "S-I-C-K," "H-O-M-O," and "D-E-A-D," the combined effect of which implies violence toward gays. One also finds "F-E-S-T-A," a clear reference to Jay Festa, President of Commuter Area Government, student senator, and one of the most prominent student gay rights activists at the University. He and other students are shown in a photograph on page six under the caption "queers."

With these expressions of intolerance and implicit violence directed at a specific community and a specific student leader, the Minuteman has stepped far beyond the bounds of reasonable discourse. In so doing it has fostered a climate of intimidation and fear on this campus and has threatened the well-being of the gay community in general and Jay Festa in particular.

The failure of the campus to come together and make perfectly clear that we will not stand by and allow any group or individual to be the target of bigoted attacks would indicate our tacit complicity with those who perpetuate intimidation and hatred. We urge all students, faculty, and staff sensitive to the gravity of this threat to notify the Student Government Association, the Board of Governors, and the Dean of Students of their concerns on this issue.

Facing hard facts

Americans have traditionally disliked the artificial and opted for the genuine. Prior to the elevation of Madison Ave. and its mega-industry, advertising, the "real McCoy" was preferred in everything from cars to furniture to politicians. Now we are often unsure what, or who, is for real. As long as we consume, the manipulators of taste will be silent.

Columnist Russel Baker recently wrote about the various identities that George Bush has assumed within the past year. Only last summer Mr. Bush was considered The Wimp. Then in a nasty campaign, he emerged as The Ugly Candidate (but as he won, we forgave him mostly). Now, it is President Bush, Nice Guy. In the midst of his "honeymoon," one commentator remarked at a champagne reception hosted by the President: "Who could dislike such a man?" The press may rightly crave some collegiality after eight years of Reagan, but that is no reason to suspend the intellect.

Those of us concerned about the health of the nation — and you must be exceedingly wealthy or a dreamer not to be — should recall that power flows from the consent of the governed. If one is straining to survive, a paycheck or two for the homeless, for our schools or the environment is what you want, you had better insist that those in high places hear your story.

Consider some of these hard facts from a typical day in the United States: 27 children die because of poverty, 9 children die from guns and 5 teens commit suicide. As if those figures aren't ghastly enough; 3,288 children flee from their homes and 36,057 adults lose their jobs.

However President Bush may appear in press conferences, it is up to the people (and press) to remember, to instruct him, that there is not a "Ms. Rosy Scenario" in the heartland, the cities, the families. Instead the US is facing its gravest crisis since its inception and our souls shall be more than tried.

Child care: The wait continues

All centers have wait

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

The enormous add drop lines of students trying to enroll in classes are not the only frustrating waits at the University of Massachusetts.

All four child care facilities on campus also have lengthy waits to enroll a child.

"Usually parents need to apply two years in advance," said Neil Brigham, director of New World Day School. "Unfortunately, we don't have enough child care facilities on campus," he said.

The New World Day School and Grass Roots Day School, operated by the University Child Care System, are available to children of students, faculty, and staff at UMass.

The Grass Roots Day School and New World Day School, the green and red buildings near the Warren McGuirk Stadium, house children between the ages of 15 months and five years.

Michael Denney, director of Grass Roots, agreed that applications should be submitted early, and that more child care services are needed

Alicia Smith, director of the University Child Care System, said, "Prior to September we had a very long waiting list for preschoolers. However, there has been a very large turn-over since then, and now the waiting list for toddlers is very long."

The length of the wait for an individual depends on the age, sex, and ethnicity of the children, she said.

"We try to maintain a balance of sexes, ethnicity, and student/staff faculty ratios of children," Smith said, "We try very hard to be fair to everyone."

Combined, the two facilities accommodate 81 children: 63 preschoolers and 18 toddlers, Smith said. The teacher/child ratio in the preschool program is 1 to 6, and in the toddler program it is 5 to 18.

Both programs have a sliding-scale fee based on family income, said Smith, adding that the children of faculty, staff, and students are enrolled proportionally.

The Human Development Laboratory School is a teacher-training preschool and day care program for the School of Education, said Elenore Thuemmel, the program's administrative assistant.

"There's always a waiting list," Thuemmel said, "I can't tell you how long it is because it depends on what program is open."

The Lab School has three different programs, she said, for infants, toddlers, and two groups of preschool-aged children, Thuemmel said

The infants and toddlers attend Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., and have a sliding-scale fee from $8.50 to $15.75 an hour, she said

The two preschool groups meet Monday, Wednesday, and Friday for 2½ hours a day, with a semester fee of $275.

"We don't give preference because of affiliation with the university," Thuemmel said. "We try to get children from a broad range of socio-economic and cultural backrounds."

The Walden Learning Center, affiliated with the Department of Psychology, is the smallest preschool program on campus, said Madeleine Charney, the administrative assistant.

"The program integrates typical and autistic children in a very loving, but challenging environment," Charney said. "We have a very small teacher-child ratio: It's only 1 to 3," she said.

The preschool costs $2.25 an hour, and meets Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The director of Grass Roots said, "UMass is the largest employer in this area. If we recognize the families in the community, we have to recognize the need for child care."

Empty playgrounds are an illusion. Child care centers are full and waiting lists continue to grow.

Vouchers help ease rising costs

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

The money provided by one of the negative check-off fees on the University of Massachusetts' semester bills is helping to lift a financial burden from undergraduate students with children.

And the Graduate Student Senate tax, paid by graduate students, is providing similar assistance for parents enrolled in graduate school.

Child care voucher programs, funded from both sources, award money to parents at UMass who can not afford the rising costs of child care. Jay Festa, an undergraduate Child Care Voucher Committee member, said 15 students have applied for full or partial child care funding this semester, and money is still available.

Since last spring, the Commuter Area Government has collected $23,000 for the program, he said.

Students who do not check off the child care fee allow a dollar form their bill to be used for the voucher program. "This is not an added charge," Festa said.

The Board of Trustees approved the negative check off fee in the fall of 1987, but no money was distributed until last semester, because a committee to review applications and administer funds was not formed until the summer, the commuter area senator said.

Last fall 15 students received a total of more than $6,000. The maximum amount of money awarded to one student has been about $1,200 a year, he said.

The number of students who have shown an interest in the program so far does not reflect the growing need for child care subsidies, Festa said: "This is a new program. It's been hard to get the word out."

Students may use the vouchers at any licensed child care facility, Festa said, adding that about half have opted to use on-campus services. Most recipients have been single women, he said.

The Child Care Voucher Commmittee, advised by the Financial Aid Office, decides how to distribute the money, Festa said.

"The amount of money students get depends on how much money we have, and how much they need for the cost of child care," he said.

The Graduate Student Senate's voucher program is operated in a similar way, but has already used up its funds for this year, a member of the GSS Child Care Voucher Committee said.

Wendy Farley, a graduate student, said the committee is still accepting applications, but no new applicants will be given vouchers unless someone drops out of the program. As persons apply, their names will be added to a waiting list, Farley said.

If openings arise, names will be taken from this list, Farley said. Applications for next year will be accepted from May until August, she added.

Twice as many students applied for vouchers this year than last, but the same number of students received aid because the GSS allocates a set amount of money for the program, Farley said. This year, 40 graduate students applied for vouchers, and 14 received aid, she said. Students receive either $50 or $25 each week, she said.

"This hardly goes anywhere to cover all costs," Farley said. "We wish there was a whole lot more we could give out."

Nancy Rios, a child care coordinator on campus, said child care costs average $150 a week in this area.

To fund the vouchers, the GSS allocates $5,000, two percent of the GSS tax, each year, she said. Full-time graduate students pay $63 a year for this tax, she added.

A committee of graduate students choose which applicants receive the vouchers. "The sole determinent is need," Farley said.

Money is paid directly to liscenced child care centers primarily off campus, because on-campus child care is so competitive, and because the GSS funds university child care through another part of its budget, Farley said.

Woman quits school

Finds child care hassles overwhelming

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Up at 7 a.m., Lloyda Rodriguez arouses her infant twin sons, Oscar and Lloyd, and her toddler daughter, Valerie, from their beds.

The night before, after finishing her studies, she prepared bottles, grabbed extra pampers, and selected changes of clothes, stuffing them into a backpack for Valerie and a diaper bag for the twins.

After poking the six little arms through shirt sleeves, pulling the six wiggly legs through pant holes, and popping the three delicate heads through necklines, Lloyda wraps them in their coats.

Bundled, she loads the twins into the stroller, in which the seats face each other, puts the backpack over Valerie's shoulders, and shuffles out the door.

When Valerie is willing, she minces beside her mom. Otherwise Lloyda carries Valerie and pushes the two-seater with the diaper bag swung over her shoulder.

The family heads to a neighbor in the North Village housing complex who graciously transports them to the New World day care center near the Warren McGuirk Stadium.

Then she begins her day of a full load of classes and makes a dent in her 30-hour-a-week receptionist job at the Everywoman's Center

Lloyda epitomizes the 80's woman.

Simultaneously, she is a mother, a wife, a student, and a working woman.

Lloyda was a single mother when she came to the University of Massachusetts from Puerto Rico as an undergraduate student with Valerie as her only child. With support groups such as Women's Admissions and General Education Support, she says she found child care for her daughter easily accessed.

When she had the twins she had to take them to a family day care provider off campus because university day care doesn't provide care for infants, she says. When she finally could enroll the twins on campus she only kept them there for less than a year because she was forced to take a leave of absence from school because stress from her routine had exhausted her, she says.

"It was also stressful to think I'm going to leave all this. I'm not going to accomplish what I want. I had to make a choice," Lloyda says.

During her leave of absence she decided to get married, but when she looked for financial assistance to help her return to school and to assist with child care, she says, the money was dried up because of her marital status.

She says, "If you don't have the support of agencies, it's real hard."

Their family income was not enough to provide for school and child care. In fact, she says, after paying rent the rest of the money went toward food.

She stays home now because when she tried working at the same time her husband was working, the money she made was consumed by child care fees; they just broke even, she says.

Her husband, Oscar, now works for UMass even though he could get a higher paying job, because Lloyda can some day return to school tuition-free, he says.

Lloyda says what holds her back now from enrolling in school: "We're waiting for the kids to grow up."

Once the twins, age 4, are in school then providing child care will be out of the way, she says.

But tonight the Rodriguez family stays home with the treat of a rented movie, "The Great Outdoors," and shelves their dreams.

State child care bill filed again

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

The Child Care Linkage Bill, which died last November in the Senate Ways and Means Committee, has been refiled in the state House of Representatives.

The bill, first introduced in 1986 and sponsored in the senate by Sen. John D. Olver, D-Amherst, would require all businesses and industries constructing buildings over 50,000 square feet to provide space for child care facilities on or off the premises, or contribute to the Child Care Linkage Fund.

The money in the Child Care Linkage Fund would be used to maintain other child care centers in the region. This legislation would not exempt the University of Massachusetts.

Kate Mehr, staff aide to Olver, said, "The bill died in November because the Senate did not have time to address the bill during Governor Dukakis' campaign for president."

Edith Aherne, staff aide to the House's prime sponsor of the bill, Rep. David Cohen, D-Newton, said business owners have been the most active lobbyists against the bill. "Businesses don't like being told what to do. Some perceive it as a trend toward government overregulation."

The bill requires developers only to provide space, which would then be contracted out to non-profit child care providers. The providers would pay no rent, but would be responsible for covering all other costs.

"This is significant, though," Aherne said, "because often finding affordable space is the biggest obstacle to providing child care in this state."

Aherne said the bill is important because child care affects everyone. "Certainly it concerns parents and children, but it also has a big effect on employers and the economy," she said.

Employers lose money when employees miss work because of inadequate child care arrangements, she said. Employers could increase their available work force by attracting parents who could not work unless child care was provided, she added.

Mehr said even though the bill was not approved by the Senate, she was encouraged by its progress: "The bill has never gone further than it's gone. It took 10 years to pass the bottle bill. This is real exciting because the child care bill made it to the Senate last year," she said.

The bill has been referred to the Human Services Committee, Mehr said, and should be heard by the committee by the end of this month. "We're hopeful," Mehr said, "that it should have no problem in the Human Services Committee, though with new members on the committee nothing is certain."

Aherne said, "Optimistically, the bill could pass this spring, but more realistically, the earliest it will pass is next fall."

Grass Roots and New World day care schools provide child care for 81 children. The center is only for the children of University of Massachusetts students, faculty, and staff.

Experimental surgery may only improve condition

BOSTON (AP) — An experimental brain operation for Parkinson's disease has produced moderate improvement for some victims but not the "miracle" that an earlier report seemed to suggest, a researcher said.

"All the patients in our group have said they felt it was worthwhile, but in no case has it achieved what they hoped it would," said Dr. Christopher G. Goetz of Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

The operation was first reported two years ago by Dr. Ignacio Madrazo and colleagues at the National Autonomous University of Mexico and the social security hospital system in Mexico City. They reported dramatic improvement in two patients, and since then, surgeons at many medical centers have tried to duplicate their results.

"What came out originally was the sense that this was a miracle," said Goetz. "This is no miracle."

His report combined the results of surgery on 19 patients at his hospital and at the University of South Florida and the University of Kansas. The results were published in yesterday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Parkinson's disease results from destruction of a part of the brain called the nigral tissue, which make dopamine. The adrenal glands, which lie above the kidney, also produce this substance.

Between 500,000 and 1 million Americans, including 2 percent of everyone over 70, have Parkinson's. They often suffer tremors and have trouble controlling their movements.

Study: outpatients stay off booze just as long as ward patients

BOSTON (AP) — People suffering from mild to moderate symptoms of alcohol withdrawal stay off booze just as long when treated as outpatients as they do when admitted to hospital treatment wards, a new study suggests.

The report noted that the out-patient approach has the advantage of being considerably less expensive than putting alcoholics in the hospital for detoxification.

The comparison study found that those who went into the hospital were more likely to get through the initial program, but after six months those treated as outpatients were doing just as well.

The study, directed by Dr. Motoi Hayashida, was conducted at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Philadelphia and published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"We conclude that out-patient medical detoxification is an effective, safe and low-cost treatment for patients with mild to moderate symptoms of alcohol withdrawal," the researchers wrote.

The conclusions were based on 164 men who had volunteered for treatment alcohol withdrawal. They were randomly assigned to the out-patient program or to hospital admission.

Those treated as outpatients were given the drug oxazepam and asked to report to a hospital clinic each day, where their blood alcohol levels were measured and they were asked whether or not they had been drinking.

Harvard chemist, Corey, wins Japan Prize

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Elias J. Corey, a Harvard University organic chemist who was awarded the lucrative Japan Prize for 1989 on Wednesday, received his doctorate at the age of 22 and has been a leader in the development of bioorganic substances used for therapy.

Corey declined to discuss the award yesterday, but issued a statement through the university's news office.

"This prize is an unequalled honor for several reasons, not the least of which is the extraordinary quality of scientific research in Japan in fields such as my own," Corey said. "I am appreciative and delighted both to receive the Japan Prize and to be so connected with the country."

The 71-year-old Corey has published more than 660 scientific papers during the last 40 years. One of his achievements was the development of chemical pathways for the synthesis of more than 60 complex naturally occurring organic molecules, according to biographic material on file at the university.

But the Japan Prize Selection Committee chose Corey from a field of 407 nominees for sythesizing prostagladins — key regulatory substances in the body. His work with prostagladins has led to the production of many therapeutic synthetic agents.

In 1979, he sythesized leukotriene A before it was found to be the precursor of the leukotrine family, a discovery which made previously inaccessible substances available for biologeal research, according to the litarature.

Along with University of California-Irvine professor Frank S. Rowland, Corey was awarded 50 million yen ($387,600). The prizes, given for scientific achievements contributing to world peace and prosperity are to be presented April 12. They are considered Japan's version of the Nobel Prize.

A 1948 graduate from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Corey earned his doctorate there in 1950 at age 22.

Investigation delays Tower confirmation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The confirmation vote on Defense Secretary-designate John Tower was delayed for at least 10 days as senior Democrats on the Armed Services Committee said yesterday the FBI was reviewing allegations about the former senator's finances.

At the White House, press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the new allegation "relates to Sen. Tower's activities while he was in the Senate." He refused to elaborate but said President Bush still stands by Tower and expects that he will be confirmed.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the Armed Services Committee chairman, told reporters he could not vote to confirm Tower until the latest allegations were checked, and said he had told President Bush that at a White House meeting on Tuesday night.

"I told the president frankly that I have serious concerns, and I also stated that if a vote was held immediately as some have urged, I would vote no because of these concerns," Nunn told reporters.

"There are new allegations of a financial nature which are now being checked in the Tower nomination," he said.

The administration had been pushing for a vote this week but dropped the request after Nunn and the ranking Republican on the Armed Services panel, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, met with Bush. "They really can't vote until this matter is checked out," Fitzwater said.

The spokesman said Nunn's asertion that he would vote against Tower if a vote were held now was "disappointing, very disappointing."

The second-ranking Democrat on the committee, Sen. James Exon of Nebraska, said the latest FBI report on Tower could not be complete by tomorrow, when the Senate is scheduled to begin a week-long recess.

"As a practical matter, they can't draw it out too long," Exon told reporters.

The Senate majority leader, George Mitchell of Maine, said on the floor of the Senate that all members of that body wanted a chance to thoroughly review the FBI report on Tower, and therefore, "I don't see how it is possible to bring the matter to a vote this week."

Republicans immediately rushed to defend the nominee. The Senate republican leader, Bob Dole, said in response to Mitchell that he had spoken with Tower on the telephone this morning and found him "upbeat about the nomination."

"He is aware of the new allegation," said Dole, adding that Tower thinks his nomination should be confirmed and "he is hanging in there."

Another Republican on the committee, William Cohen of Maine, said that "once these remaining questions are answered, [Tower] will have considerable support, bipartisan support, both of the committee and on the Senate floor."

And Cohen cautioned against allowing the Tower nomination to turn into a "partisan wrangle" between Democrats and Republicans.

"Ninety percent of the allegations are garbage," said Exon, specifically disputing a rumor that Tower had an affair with a dancer who had defected from the Soviet bloc.

The remaining allegations, he said, concerned Tower's drinking habits and his ability to avoid a conflict of interest with defense contractors from whom he collected more than $1 million as a consultant.

Clubs host lively shows

By JODY GABIN
Collegian Correspondent

As the Pioneer Valley braces itself for another six weeks of blustery ice and wind, local area clubs and colleges are offering enough entertainment to draw virtually everyone from their state of frozen torpor.

Tonight at the Iron Horse, catch the vocal harmonies of Fraden and Ritter and Feld, Holmes, and Henry. The two trios (heavily influenced by Crosby, Stills, and Nash) will be performing one show only at 7pm.

LIVEWIRE

For all Grateful Dead enthusiasts, Katina's is hosting Max Creek tonight at 8; and, appearing at the Universal Joint along with The Sane and the Ray Mason Band, are the Boston-based Neighborhoods. Showtime - 8:30pm.

Tomorrow night, be sure to catch bluesman Robert Jr. Lockwood at the Iron Horse. Lockwood, stepson of the legendary Robert Johnson, will be performing at 8:30pm.

If that's not your style, then check out New Orleans' own Radiators in the UMass Student Union Ballroom at 8pm. Playing a mixture of classic blues, calypso, and bluegrass, the Radiators will be joined by the notoriously eclectic Phish. Phish, who hail from Burlington, Vermont, will also be headlining a show of their own on Saturday, at Sheehan's in Northampton.

On February 11, heavy metal comes to Katina's with the return of Farrenheit; and Bim Skala Bim return to bring their energetic brand of ska to the Universal Joint for two shows - all ages at 5pm and 21+ at 10.

Also on the 11th, folk extraordinaire, Bill Morrisey, appears at the Iron Horse for one show at 8:30pm.

On Sunday, February 12, Jesse Winchester plays along with Pierce Pettis at Amherst College; and singer/songwriter Si Khan will be playing a benefit for Grassroots Leadership and the Western Massachusetts Food Bank. Kahn, one of the South's preeminent labor organizers, will bring his brand of folk to the Iron Horse for two shows 6:30 and 8:30pm. All proceeds wil benefit the afore mentioned organizations.

On Monday the 13th, Jeff Holmes brings jazz to the Universal Joint from 8:30-12; and ex-10,000 Maniacs guitarist John Lombardo brings his solo project, The Hopheads, to the Iron Horse, for one show at 8:30 .

The 14th brings a Valentine's Day ('free roses for the ladies') dance party to Katina's in Hadley; and legendary jazz pianist Cecil Taylor hits the Iron Horse for two shows at 7 and 10pm.

Up-and-coming events: Bo Diddley at the Universal Joint, Luther Guitar Jr. Johnson at the Iron Horse, and Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers at the UMass Fine Arts Center.

Times change; but the song remains the same at UMass

It's now approaching a full year since the University's "revised policy on alcohol" went into effect. While many feel that the spring concerts just aren't the same without a frosty cooler to delve into, it's clear that University officials are pleased with improved behavior at spring events, and hope for a change in attitudes toward responsible use of alcohol throughout the residence halls.

Joe Zanini, Director of Housing Services, gives credit to students for policing their residential areas while still maintaining an enjoyable atmosphere.

"I really felt that the alcohol policy improved the (social) environment during the spring events," he said. "The concerts were well policed. There was less litter from alcohol, and there were less non-university people coming and abusing alcohol.

"The policy was designed strictly for outdoor events, however, there is still a problem on campus with students abusing alcohol, falsifying identification and posess-

Margaret Atwood's nine lives

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Cat's Eye
Margaret Atwood
Random House

Somewhat uncharacteristically perhaps, Margaret Atwood has written her new novel, Cat's Eye, in the form of an autobiography, but don't let that put you off. Atwood is much too intelligent to hang out her dirty laundry on its 400 or so pages. However, she is certainly interested in how people create their own histories, and the images they project of themselves at any given moment in time.

Elaine Risley is a painter, admired by feminists but more or less dismissed by the patriarchal art establishment, who finds herself returning to her native Toronto for a retrospective of her work, one which will awaken many ghosts from her past, among them her gifted brother, the formiddable figure of Mrs. Smeath and particularly her sometime childhood friend, Cordelia whose enigmatic presence continues to haunt her as she wanders through the streets of 80's Toronto, a city much changed since her youth.

Atwood is particularly good at writing about the cruelties and betrayals of childhood which, like Ian McEwan she views as being simply the adult world in miniature. She magnifies events which may seem insignificant to frighteningly real and sometimes surreal dimensions.

In a manner similar to the central character in McEwan's Child in Time, Elaine finds the events of her life folding over, creating a sense that time, far from being a linear progression, is in fact multi-layered; the past superimposes itself on present and future. Just as her brother in his studies, finds the universe to be ever-changing and impossible to define, so Elaine, in trying to make some sense of her own life through her paintings, discovers that this too is malleable.

The painting motif suggests that Atwood is equally concerned with the nature of art, and its supposed ability to defy the forces of time. Elaine is disenchanted with the pretentiousness of the art world and its attempts to pigeonhole her work, yet at the same time acknowledges that it has, in a sense, taken the meaning of her paintings away from her, just as society as a whole has, in it's "grand march" into the future, as Czech writer, Milan Kundera put it, erased the meaning of history.

Atwood's roots as a novelist obviously lie in the Victorian realism of Eliot and Dickens, and her wonderfully vivid characters are testament to this. But she is actually more of a magic realist, juggling with Freud, Marx and Yung amongst others and still managing to maintain almost perfect balance, with a prose that is both lucid and elusive. Her insights into the minds of men are worryingly accurate, and may even prompt a school of "masculinist" deconstruction. I'm not asking you to deconstruct Cat's Eye, I'm telling you to read it.

■ alcohol policy

ing alcohol as minors," he said.

University policy allows for students age 21 and over to consume and/or serve alcohol (at no charge) within the confines of their respective rooms. There is no public drinking allowed, there are no "large volume containers" permitted. Students under the age of 21 are prohibitted from drinking (by both University policy, and more importantly state law). With clear cut regulations such as these, one might expect an overall responsible handling of alcohol by those housed on campus. Right?

Craig Brown is an R.A. in the Kennedy dormitory, and has lived in the building for the last 2 years.

"I don't think there's been much of a change (in behavior of residents). Some people may hide it a little bit better than before, but I think people are drinking just as much."

Lynn Bryan, Resident Director in Brown House in the Sylvan area, feels strongly that today's advertising is geared toward the weaknesses of young people.

"Our society lets people know that it's okay to drink to excess, especially college students. It's the societal norm. Spuds McKenzie says it's okay to drink, so people do," she said.

Pleasant Street animation festival is a merry jaunt through cartoons of the world

by RAYMOND MARTIN
Collegian Correspondent

21st International Tournee of Animation
Pleasant St. Theater

You're never too old for good cartoons, and The 21st International Tournee of Animation is a collection of great cartoons.

These aren't Tom and Jerry or Looney Tunes, but instead a collection of fourteen cartoons from all over the world, each with fresh ideas. The hour and fifty minute movie features sequences from Cuba, Hungary, Canada, Brazil, and Great Britain, just to name a few countries. Language is never a problem, however.

All the cartoons in this movie are far from stale and predictable. Many of the cartoons in the show are just meant to be enjoyable and funny, like the one about a man trying to kill an adorable - but destructive - kitten. Others have a message that is sometimes deep and thoughtful, while others are unsettling and sometimes scary.

On the scary side is The Writer, a cartoon that makes one's hair stand on end. In it, we see an old man writing a book, and we go into the book's world, watching it form as the old man writes it. Soon Death appears in the book, killing every character except for a short magician, who fights back. Later we find out more about that magician, more about that writer, and a lot more about why a writer would scribble out a story about death and magicians in the first place.

On a lighter note is Arnold Escapes From Church, a tale for anyone who can remember what it was like to be a little kid in a boring situation with dreams of being somewhere - anywhere - else. That's what Arnold does, dreaming of exciting places to go and things to do. What makes the story so charming is Arnold's interpretation of the 23rd. Psalm, in which he visualizes the words the way a young boy would and translates the elements into things he understands. When the priest reads "and you shall dwell in the house of the Lord," for example, Arnold dreams he is in a treehouse.

The central piece of the movie is The Man Who Planted Trees, the winner of the the 1987 Academy Award for best animated short. It is a simple story about a man who spent his life planting trees and the effect his planting had on the people who never even knew he existed. It's a sensitive, insightful look at a lifestyle and an ambition that most people would think odd, but that makes this man happy, nd is told from the point of view of a young man who travels the countryside. He first visits the planter prior to the first World War, at which time the man had planted 10,000 oak trees. The young man continues to visit the planter every year until he dies, and sees the slow transformation of a land that was desolate into what he describes as the "land of Canann."

For anyone who is young at heart or wants to return to the days when he or she was, I thoroughly recommend The 21st International Tournee of Animation. It is funny, thoughtful, and great entertainment.

144 believed dead after jet crash

LISBON, Portugal (AP)— An American charter jet filled with Italian tourists slammed into a fog-covered mountain in the Azores yesterday and exploded, and all 144 people on board were feared dead, officials and news reports said.

Maria della Versesi, a spokeswoman at the Italian Embassy in Lisbon, said all 137 passengers were Italian and the seven crew members were American. She did not release any names.

The aircraft belonged to the US airline Independent Air Corp., based in Smyrna, Tenn. The flight originated in Bergamo, Italy, and was to have proceeded to Puerto Plata in the Dominican Republic, and Montego Bay in Jamaica, after making a refueling stop in the Azores.

The Portuguese news agency LUSA quoted an official from the Azores Civil Protection Service as saying about 50 bodies had been recovered and it appeared all on board died.

LUSA also quoted an unidentified member of a local flying club as saying all the passengers and crew had been killed.

Afonso Pimentel, a LUSA reporter based in the Azores, said the Boeing 707 was preparing to land at Santa Maria airport when it crashed into Pico Alto, a fog-covered, 1,794-foot-high mountain, and burst into flames.

LUSA quoted the civil protection official, who was not identified, as saying the pilot asked the airport to clear a runway for an emergency landing. The Civil Protection Service is a state body that provides rescue services and assistance in civilian emergencies.

A.L. Pittman, president of Independent Air Corp., said in an interview in Smyran that the 15-year-old company makes 400 to 500 charter flights a year, mostly in the Caribbean and Europe. Pittman, who declined to identify the seven American crew members, said the 20-year-old jetliner that crashed had a relatively low number of flight hours and no history of trouble.

Pittman said the airplane, one of two Boeing 707s owned by the company, had 12,500 cycles, or takeoffs and landings, and less than 50,000 hours in the air.

Jack Barker, spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta, said those figures were not unusually high for such an airplane.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) The news regarding an academic or business plan may be disappointing. Show your loved ones consideration by making the best of a tricky situation. Want ads yield employment possibilities. Dress to impress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You have plenty of "get-up-an-go" today; channel it productively. your practical ideas impress top people. A new partnership or business deal gives you casue to celebrate tonight. Include close pals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Conservative dress and a conventional approach help you make an excellent impression. A winter vacation or trip is on the horizon. Be imaginative. Scan travel folders for new places.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) An innovative idea can take you where you want ta go in business. Do not get carried away and pick up the tab at a fancy restaurant. Romance has you guessing. Go slow.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Deal with the nitty-gritty at work. Teamwork improves the bottom line. Collaborative financial ventures are best postponed. Domestic matters demand more of your attention than usual. Avoid lasing your temper.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Concentration will be difficult today unless you isolate yourself. Co-workers may not understand your need for solitude. Explain tactfully. Avoid making new commitments.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You could feel anxious about obtaining approval for your plans. Do your hamework before making a presentation. Investigate other options. Romantic vibes strengthen. Know your own heart.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov. 21) Partnerships could be touch-and-go today. Tread carefully when discussing joint assests. Pay a visit ta someone confined ta a nursing home or hopital. A spontaneous gesture means more than fancy promises.

SAGITTARUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) A stroke of good fortune comes your way. There should be a lasting effect on profits. Who you know counts as much as what you know. Romance soars ta new heights.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Domestic harmony could be in short supply right now. Diplomacy will help mend some fences. A new financial idea could prove highly profitable. Take a "wait-and-see" approach. Buckle dawn ta work.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Setbacks and delays early in the day could postpone launching a new project. Stick ta routine tasks. You may have ta make a sudden trip. Happy romance is featured this evening. Show tenderness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Keep plugging away at a project you started. A letter or telephone call gives you new encouragement regarding a venture you thought impractical. Forget about romance while getting business in order.

Gooden signs for $6.7 million

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden became the highest-paid player in baseball this year and the highest-paid player in the history of the New York Mets when he agreed yesterday to a three-year contract worth $6.7 million.

Gooden, who made $1.4 million in 1988 after losing in arbitration, will get a $500,00 signing bonus, $2.25 million this year, $1.7 million in 1990 and $2.25 million in 1991, a source familiar with the negotiation told the Associated Press.

Including a prorated share of the signing bonus, Gooden will receive $2,416,667 this season, topping the salary of Minnesota twins third baseman Gary Gaetti, who will get $2.4 million. But Gaetti will get $500,000 in 1990, the season that may be disrupted by a player strike or an owners' lockout.

The highest salary ever paid by the Mets previously was to catcher Gary Carter, who made about $2.3 million last season, including deferred money.

Gooden can make an additional $290,000 each year in bonuses. He would get $100,000 for winning the Cy Young Award and $50,000 for finishing second through fifth.

Duane Chase and David Brown. Calipari disagrees.

"The cream rises, sometimes you need a break to get on the floor and show what you can do," Calipari said.

What has made Tate's season so impressive is, although he is not Tiny Tim, big John Tate is usually three or four inches shorter than most of his A-10 opponents. In fact, only one team in the Atlantic 10 (Duquesne) doesn't have a player that is at least two inches taller than Tate.

"I think what he's done is against most teams he just plays a little bit harder, and plays with a little more confidence than some of the other kids he's playing against. Even though he's giving up three inches," Calipari said.

Tate said he knows his limitations and that has made him work that much more: "I can't jump over a thick phone book. So I try to figure out where the shot's going to go, try to get there first and get my body on him," he said.

Leaving Penn Hills high school ("[Jim McCoy and Richmond transfer William Herndon] live about five minutes from me"), Tate had acquired a nice package of honors and scholarship offers. The Gateway Press Player-of-the-Year, second-team all star was also recruited by Duquesne, Richmond, St.Peter's, and George Washington. But Tate chose UMass because he wanted to go away to school while still be able to visit his home when UMass returned to play its games in Pittsburgh.

The turn-around in productivity from his freshman season has surprised even Tate, who said "I didn't expect this kind of personal success. I thought the team would be O.K. I'm excited and I'm proud that I was able to make this kind of progress and I'm just hoping I can carrying it on for the rest of the season and then, if possible, get that much better next year."

Minutemen to butt heads with Rhode Island

UMass looks to sweep the series

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

The University of Rhode Island basketball team has become like a 150-pound kid on a serious weight training program. At first the 150-pound weakling was getting a lot of sand kicked in its face (starting the season 1-4), now the Rams have gotten stronger with each game and have begun to kick some sand of their own.

Not exactly what the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team needed to hear. True, the Minutemen defeated the Rams by six points three weeks ago at the Cage, but in its last two games, URI has handily disposed of its two opponents (including its humiliating 14-point victory over the Temple Owls on national TV).

And you can be sure the Rams will have revenge on their minds when the Minutemen enter Keaney Gymnasium tonight (7:30 p.m.).

The Rams have a strong inside game and will probably want to bang with UMass, something the Minutemen are hoping they can improve upon from their last performance, in which Holy Cross dismantled UMass in the middle.

In fact, the Rams have three starters up front with more than 500 career rebounds (tops for UMass is John Tate with 188). The tall timber for URI includes: Kenny Green (7.18 rbs, 7th in the A-10), John Evans, and Bonzie Colson.

Offensively, the Rams are getting 19.91 ppg from junior transfer Eric Leslie, who has obviously met greener pastures since leaving Villanova University.

The Minutemen coming off two consecutive losses want to show URI and the rest of the Ocean State that their victory over the Rams was no fluke.

Hoop du-jour: On Tuesday, UMass shot an incredible 31 of 37 from the charity stripe. Tate was 10-10, which, when combined with UMass' previous game gives him 16 straight free throws . . . And this week's Atlantic 10 Freshman of the Week is . . . . . not UMass' Jim McCoy for the first time in three weeks . . . Heading into tonight's game, URI is a perfectly keeled, .500 team. The Rams are 10-10 overall and 6-6 in the conference . . . URI coach Al Skinner is, of course, a UMass grad (class of '74).

Sophomore forward John Tate (right) will look to play the role of big man when the Minutemen take on Rhode Island tonight.

Tate taking on the role of small big man

By RONN GARRY

Expectations were varied; can he be the missing link this team is searching for? He's still young, they said. So when the public address system rang out "Entering the game for the University of Massachusetts, from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania . . ."

Of course everyone is thinking of UMass super-frosh and Pitt. native, Jim McCoy, who has pumped in the bulk of the UMass offense so far. But of equal importance has been UMass' inside bulk, sophomore John Tate.

The 6-foot-7 Tate began the season with a high GPA (2.8 last semester), but a low AMP (Average Minutes Played); as the season has progressed, with the loss of two seniors and Tate's hard work, he has become the player UMass needs on the floor at all times.

"His biggest asset to our team is his enthusiasm and his aggressiveness when he's playing hard. It's contagious,it gets the other kids playing with enthusiam rather than just going out and playing basketball," UMass coach John Calipari said.

If McCoy is UMass' MVP thus far, his fellow Pittsburgh native is certainly UMass' unsung hero (is it a coincidence that the top two players are from Pittsburgh, where Calipari was last year?).

Tate has improved by leaps and bounds. Last year he averaged only 1.5 points and 1.5 rebounds per game in 94 minutes, this year, however, the numbers have improved to 10.7 points and 8.1 rebounds (4th in the Atlantic 10) per game in almost 600 minutes.

Cynics will say the reason Tate has become a key player for the Minutemen is because of the untimely exit of seniors

UMass to take on Temple

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team takes to the road tonight in the first game of a two-game trip, facing Temple University in Philadelphia (5:45 p.m.).

Normally the prospects wouldn't be too good for the Minutewomen. In Temple, they are facing a team that is ranked 22nd in the latest Associated Press poll, one that beat UMass handily (84-70) on Jan. 7 at the Curry Hicks Cage. Yet, the Minutewomen still have a positive outlook toward this game.

"We're playing a lot better now than we were then," UMass coach Kathy Hewelt said. "We were just starting to get used to not having Michele (Pytko, starting guard who is out for the season after a knee injury)."

Still, this time the game will be played on the turf of the Owls, but Hewelt won't concede anything.

"We're going down there to win. In order to do that, we have to play hard for 40 minutes," Hewelt said.

That has been a trouble spot this year for UMass, trying to string everything together to get one straight 40-minute effort. The result has been a 9-9 record, including just 4-6 in the Atlantic 10 conference.

Temple, which enters the game at 14-3 overall and 9-0 in the A-10, is coming off a huge win last Saturday over St. Joseph's. Leading the way are Kelly Lane (18.9 points per game), and seniors Pam Balogh (17.8) and Karen Healey (12.4).

Hoop-la: Senior co-captain Beth Wilbor is zeroing in on the 1,000-point plateau, and could conceivably reach it before season's end.

With nine regular season games and at least one A-10 tournament game left for the Minutewomen, Wilbor (899 career points) needs to average just 10.1 ppg to reach the milestone. She is currently averaging 11.8 points per game.

17 commit to UM football

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Yesterday was the day when collegiate football coaches all across America found out if their months of hard work on the recruiting trails were worth it.

It was national letter-of-intent day, the first day when high school prospects could officially announce where they would be playing college ball.

The University of Massachusetts has released the names of 17 players who have made a commitment to play for the Minutemen.

UMass coach Jim Reid called this latest class the type that could bring a Yankee Conference championship, as well as one that should perform well in the classroom.

The following is a list of those who, by noon yesterday, had committed to playing for UMass:

Mark Altenweg — 6'1" 205 LB/TE Chelmsford, MA: A captain this year and team MVP each of the last two, as well as an All-Conference selection the last two seasons.

Scott Assencoa — 6'2" 210 LB Natick, MA: Was captain and team MVP this season, and a first team All-Bay State selection.

Jim Bono — 6'3" 255 OL/DL Bergenfield, NJ: A second team All-League and a New Jersey North-South All-Star selection.

Bobby Burke — 6'0" 205 ILB/FB Wayne, NJ: A three-year starter, team captain and team MVP his senior year. All-League.

Steve Dembowski — 6'1" 225 FB/TE Swampscott, MA: Captain senior year and Northeast Conference MVP. Boston Globe Division II Player-of-the-Year.

Mike Gray — 6'2" 183 DB/TE Seymour, CT:

Suspected drug trafficker caught in dorm

Police spot knife, cocaine

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

An Amherst man arrested Wednesday at the University of Massachusetts and charged with possession and trafficking cocaine pleaded not guilty at his arraignment yesterday in Northampton.

Nicco A. Stefani, 21, was arrested at Field Residence Hall late Wednesday night when police found a quantity of cocaine in his possession. Police refused to divulge the exact amount found on Stefani, but said it justified the charge of trafficking, which requires over 28 grams of the illegal narcotic.

Stefani is scheduled for a pre-trial hearing on Feb. 17 in Northampton District Court for possessing and trafficking the class B substance and having an altered driver's license.

UMass police responded to a report that Stefani was being an "unstable person." The report was made by his girlfriend, who said Stefani had left several distressing notes on her door after an argument, according to Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson.

The woman claimed to have been assaulted earlier in the evening by Stefani when he allegedly tried to abduct her in his car near Franklin Dining Commons, striking her head on the vehicle in the process, police said.

Police had received a call from a University employee that corroborated the 7 p.m. alleged assault and initiated the investigation.

She said she returned to her room at 10:30 p.m. to look for a distraught Stefani and found the notes.

While taking a statement from the woman, police said Stefani was spotted in the dormitory.

The responding officer asked the man if he was all right. Stefani said he was not. The officer then asked him if he had any dangerous weapons with him. Stefani said he did.

Police conducted a preliminary body search which turned up a knife covered with white powder and a small bag of cocaine, police said. Stefani was taken to the UMass Police station and arrested.

A subsequent body search revealed Stefani had a larger bag of cocaine stowed away in his groin area. The bag contained three smaller bags of a white rocky substance.

Cold weather hits Valley

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff
and the Associated Press

Put away the tank tops and frisbees and forget about January's mild weather, it's time once again to find your scarves, mittens and extra-heavy sweaters.

Winter has come back to the Pioneer Valley.

The weather forecast for the next few days: cold, cold and more cold.

Yesterday's high was 26, which to many seems reasonable, but according to the Associated Press, that temperature was recorded at midnight. The low, recorded at 7 p.m., was 13. Combined with gusts of up to 20 m.p.h., students at the University of Massachusetts, and residents throughout the area felt the frigid air yesterday.

Don't expect the cold weather to end anytime soon. The Associated Press reported that today's highs throughout New England should be no higher than 25, with tonight's low temperatures may be as low as 5 and 15 below zero.

Paul Sutton, a meteorologist for Springfield's Channel 40, said the current weather is normal for this time of year and even January's mild temperatures are not that uncommon.

"Everything's coming in short drabs this winter," Sutton said, but "it's been an unusual winter in that we haven't had any snow."

Sutton said the weather for the next 10 days will be normal for this time of year: more cold temperatures.

To avoid exposure — the biggest problem during frigid temperatures — wear plenty of warm clothes, Sutton said.

"The better you layer-up the better you're going to feel," he said.

Budget cuts delay long-needed FAC repairs

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center is in dire need of repairs, according to the center's director, but those repairs, scheduled for this semester, have been delayed because of the state's fiscal crisis.

"The longer we wait," said Fine Arts Center Director Fred Tillis, "the more difficult it becomes [to do the work]."

"In fact it's at the point where it could be considered dangerous," he said.

The repairs, which have been needed for at least 10 years and were ready to be bid on by contractors, were scrapped when the state began cutting the University's budget, Tillis said.

The areas requiring the most extensive work are the FAC Gallery's roof, which is also the main plaza between the two theatres, and the roof of the music library, which is the smaller plaza of the art department closest to North Pleasant St., Tillis said.

Jim MacRostie, director of operations, said leaks in the membranes that are supposed to seal the roofs below the plazas have caused extensive damage.

> "The longer we wait, the more difficult it becomes"
> --Fred Tillis

The situation is similar to the problems with the Campus Center plazas, which were remedied last year, he said.

"There's been no real maintenance done," said MacRostie, "It's analogous to treating cancer with a band-aid.

"The only way to solve this [problem] is to cover [the plaza] with something or you must put down a new waterproof membrane and then restore the concrete for walking," he said.

The estimated cost of the repairs is $4 to $5 million but because the contract was never bid on, the final cost is unknown, MacRostie said.

"Wherever concrete is being used as a roofing material, all of those places leak," he said.

Also, MacRostie said water is rusting some of the reinforcing iron bars. This rust then permeates the surrounding concrete, causing cracks to develop, much in the same way freezing water breaks rocks apart.

But temperature is not a factor with rust and concrete, he said.

"It's getting weak in places," he said, "It's not going to fall in [right now], but in 10 years it might.

"There's nothing you can do but fix it right," he said.

MacRostie said the project is out of his hands because any maintenance to state buildings is controlled by the Department of Capital Planning and Operations at the State House in Boston.

"So whatever we want to do here we can't do it until they say so," he said.

Therefore, MacRostie continued, "We're doing [the planning] with our eyes closed and wearing boxing gloves because we have to go through this agency."

Tillis said that the FAC is organizing their programs around a possible repair schedule starting in the fall of 1990.

Among the changes that will have to take place for the work to get started will be moving the music library into the main University library and altering the scheduling of cultural programs, such as concerts and plays, at the FAC concert hall, he said.

"It's just unfortunate that the budget crisis we're facing eliminated something the state really wanted to do," Tillis said.

For railroad buffs, hobby show on track

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

A train is a train is a train, until you begin to add cars to the train, and suddenly the train is a piece of history, and sometimes even a thing of beauty.

But no matter what type of train you envisage when you hear the chug of an engine or the shrill of a whistle, the Amherst Railway Society probably is the best place to be this Sunday when they hold their 18th annual Railroad Hobby Show, at the Eastern States Exposition's Better Living Center in West Springfield.

Dubbed "the largest show of its kind in the Northeast," by the society, its main feature is railroading as a hobby. Model locomotives, structures, rolling stock and track layout will be exhibited throughout the show, according to director Robert Buck.

Vendors are also scheduled to attend, selling equipment, memorabilia and books, Buck said. Representatives from railroad companies such as Conrail and Amtrak are scheduled to attend, he said.

The Amherst Railway Society has been running the show for most of its 25 years in existence, since two University of Massachusetts chemistry professors, Everett Turner and Al Wynn, founded it in 1964.

According to William Venman of the School of Education, who is also a treasurer for the society, the show was first held at Goessmann Laboratory, then grew to fit the Student Union Ballroom. It finally moved to the Eastern States Exposition grounds about eight years ago. According to Buck, the show will be held in the Better Living Center for the second straight year.

As the show has grown, so have the expenses. Venman estimated that overhead for the show, which includes rent of the center space, utilities and payroll, is estimated between $15,000 and $16,000. He expected admission fees to earn between $13,000 and $15,000.

The group itself has many diverse members, Buck said. Interests of the members range from photography to collecting artifacts relating to railroads. He has a wide range of hobbies relating to the subject, from model railroader to restorer of old trolley cars.

People of various ages ("from 8 to 80," Buck said) belong to the group. Membership is free for UMass students.

Admission for the show is $3 for adults, $1 for children under 12 and free for children under 5. Proceeds from the show will go toward promoting interest in railroading.

Phone company assists college day care program

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A prominent telephone company is doing more than just reaching out and touching someone these days.

Last week the New England Telephone Day Care Initiative awarded a $1,288 grant to Hampshire College for the purchase of a $250 triple-seat stroller, four cribs totalling $600, and tables and chairs for infants.

Ellen LaFleche, Hampshire College assistant director for public relations, said the Initiative awarded funds to 42 day care centers in Massachusetts, one-fourth of the agencies in the state.

The telephone company has been accepting proposals and bestowing grants for three years, awarding 140 state agencies a total of $750,000 for capital improvements during that time, LaFleche said.

Hampshire College Day Care Director Lynne Brill said the center was built last August and provides child care for the children of college faculty and staff, the five-college area and the community.

Brill said the company's donation is a commendable effort to address the need for child care in the area.

"I think it's great," she said. "I think anything that goes to children's services is a positive thing."

About 38 children, ages five and under, participate in the day care program daily, facilitated by Brill, six teachers and 25 work-study students.

"It's a developmentally-based program with an emphasis on nurturing and also providing a stimulating program for infants, toddlers and pre-schoolers," she said.

Although the center is just six months old, Brill said a long waiting list for slots has already begun, and that there is a continued need for supplies.

"We definitely need more equipment outdoors and indoors," she said.

In addition to the insufficient number of child care slots, Brill said people who are lucky enough to find day care are forced to pay exorbitant costs.

"I think there is a child care crisis in this country," she said, citing a lack of infant care openings.

The day care profession is primarily composed of women and Brill said there is a need to review the "pathetic" salaries of day-care workers.

"There's definitely a need to upgrade the salaries of child care workers," she said. "[The wages] are much lower than they should be for the caliber of training they have."

Ralph joins SGA race

Former Justice to run for SGA president

Former Student Justice Thomas Ralph formally announced his candidacy for president of the Student Government Association earlier this week.

Ralph, who is also a resident assistant in MacKimmie, resigned from the student judiciary four days ago in disagreement with the court's choice to uphold a consent decree allowing Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz to take office as SGA co-presidents.

The 3-hour filibuster that dominated the first senate meeting Wednesday night also prevented Ralph from announcing his candidacy, although he said he was promised time on the floor.

The consistent lack of progress made by the senate is something Ralph, said he wants to change.

"I would like to see something get done in the SGA for the first time in a while," he said.

Ralph said he is not an extremist, but a moderate candidate who is "genuinely concerned about student issues."

"I think in the past the SGA has been dominated by the radical right and the radical left," he said. "Because of that, nothing gets accomplished."

Campus safety, including better lighting, more "help" boxes and more funding to the student escort service are major issues on his campaign platform, Ralph said.

The Mullins Convocation Center is also of importance if it includes an increase in student fees, he said.

"My contention is the students should pay as little as possible for it," Ralph said.

Add/drop lines, class cancellations and drops are also issues Ralph said he would address in his campaign.

Author blasts 'JAP' stereotype

By C.C. SANDORFI
Collegian Correspondent

The crowds at Bloomingdale's aren't the only things JAP's have to worry about.

The "new bigotry" of "JAP-baiting" is an old prejudice in new wrapping, New York author Susan Weidman Schneider said Wednesday night during a lecture sponsored jointly by Amherst and Smith Colleges.

Schneider, editor of Lilith, a Jewish women's magazine and author of "Jewish and Female," told nearly 100 people that JAP-baiting and the term "Jewish American Princess" (or JAP) is a cover for ingrained prejudices in America today against Jews and women.

"The JAP-baiting phenomenon is a very potent and very pernicious amalgam of two prejudices very dear to Americans' hearts — anti-Semitism and misogyny," she said.

Schneider said although colleges or towns accused of having anti-Semitic prejudices will deny these allegations, growing evidence points to an escalation of slurs directed specifically at women.

Incidents in 1987 at Syracuse University supported her conclusions. At a football game, the entire crowd took up the chant of "JAP, JAP" and singled out a Jewish woman in the stands, she said.

She added that anti-Semitic graffiti cut into a library table said, "Hitler didn't do enough."

All this, Schneider said, helps reinforce the prejudice that Jewish women are more acquisitive, more materialistic and more self-absorbed than other women.

She said the history of the JAP acronym began in subtle ways, evidenced by shows like "Father Knows Best," in which the daughter was referred to lovingly as "Princess."

In the 1970s, she said, the use of the word increased when T-shirts emblazoned "Princess" and adorned with the Star of David became "hot items."

However, she said, even this was a somewhat kindly, paternalistic use of the term. This changed in the late 1970s and early 1980s when male Jewish comedians turned to their female counterparts as sources for stereotypical anecdotes, Schneider said.

"The jokes revolved around the idea that Jewish women were simultaneously more sexually promiscuous than other women but also more unavailable," she said.

They implied Jewish women were very sexually active before marriage, but after marriage were frigid, said Schneider.

Later, she said, the number and kinds of jokes escalated and the words "Jewish American Princess" were telescoped into the simple acronym "JAP."

"The quick acronym is a cheap shot, a trivialization of the issue," she said.

Although JAP-baiting began as an in-group phenomenon, she said, it filtered into other cultures.

"It became a passport for cultural boundaries to be crossed," she said. "It became a screen behind which anti-Semitism could conceal itself."

It was a handy label. Instead of describing a woman as vain, selfish or materialistic, one could simply call her a JAP, Schneider said.

Sorority gives bench

Alpha Chi Omega honors late alumnus

By PAUL McALEER
Collegian Correspondent

This bench [is] not . . . a memorial, rather as a source of inspiration, and pride, the kind that Tracey radiated, and was so respected for.

The words are Julie Angelone's, spoken on behalf of Tracey Lee Maker, a 1955 graduate of the University of Massachusetts who died in a car crash in Florida in 1987.

Last fall, Maker's sisters at Alpha Chi Omega dedicated a bench which sits today by the campus pond, near the Fine Arts Center.

According to Michal Mizrachi, 3rd vice president for the sorority, the sisters of Alpha Chi Omega felt it was necessary to do something on behalf of Maker, a former Greek board vice president who was named Greek area "Woman of the Year" in 1985.

The pink granite bench, which cost $800, has an inscription engraved on its side that reads, "Tracey Maker. 1963-1987. Memories Live on Forever. . ." The money was raised by the sorority through alumni donations.

"In the coming years, new impressionable minds will enter this University, and when they sit on this bench, they may not be able to place a face, but they will certainly be able to feel her spirit," Angelone said.

"Throughout Tracey's years at this University, she worked hard to achieve her goals, and dreams," she said. "She did this with her own unique, vivacious style that became her trademark."

"When Tracey graduated, she left behind a spirit that lives on in our sisterhood pushing people to be the best that they can, and try to make a mark in our world," she said.

Douglass' life discussed

William S. McFeely

By JOSH GITELSON
Collegian Correspondent

Historian and Pulitzer Prize winner William S. McFeely read works by abolitionist author and orator Frederick Douglass and discussed slavery in 19th-century American narrative yesterday at Amherst College.

The lecture, coinciding with Black History Month, was the first of six forums to be delivered this semester by McFeely, the Richard B. Russell Professor of American History at the University of Georgia.

"Much slave narrative does not deal with the areas of slavery considered too unbearable," McFeely said. "Douglass shows all aspects besides the desire to leave it."

Douglass was born into slavery in Baltimore in 1818. At the age of 20, while owned by a white ship-builder's family, he escaped to New York City. After settling in New England, he was hired by the American Anti-Slavery Society.

Before the Civil War, Douglass spoke often in "free" states in the Northeast and Midwest, increasing pressure for the end of slavery, while fighting for the establishment of civil rights. At the time of his death in 1895, Douglass was one of the best-known and most articulate abolitionists in the country.

In his speech, McFeely read from Douglass' two autobiographies, Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, published in 1845, and My Bondage and My Freedom, published in 1855. According to McFeely, these books are among the most insightful of all slave narrative.

JAPs

Schneider said the use of the acronym has become so widespread it has entered common usage and is often used as an adjective, as in a "Jappy outfit," or "a Jappy woman."

Such prejudices cause great damage to Jewish women's self-esteem, while at the same time distance other women with a "That's not me" attitude, said Schneider. To avoid being labeled a JAP, they separate themselves from people they perceive to be JAPs, perpetuating stereotypes against Jewish women, she said.

Much has to be done before the JAP-baiting slurs are silenced and the stereotypes destroyed, Schneider said.

Most important, Jewish women have to speak out, she said.

"We have to have the courage to tell people when it hurts," she said.

"We have a task, when cleaning up this prejudice, to see it as a model for speaking out against other prejudices," she said. "We must make this a more socially responsible community."

Defendant in murder trial claims husband tortured her

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A woman on trial for the contract killing of her husband testified yesterday about years of torture and sexual abuse in what battered-women advocates call the first defense of its type in the state.

"I just wanted him to stop hurting me," Lisa Becker-Grimshaw, 27, of Amherst, said in her testimony in Hampden Superior Court.

Thomas Grimshaw, 30, was found beaten to death in Chicopee on June 5, 1985. A man and a teen-ager who were tried for the killing have testified that Becker-Grimshaw offered to split her husband's $300,000 insurance policy with them.

Becker-Grimshaw testified yesterday, however, that her mother told the men about the insurance policy. She said she had lied in earlier testimony because "I didn't want my mother to go to prison."

Becker-Grimshaw is arguing that she was a victim of the so-called battered woman syndrome and saw no escape from continuous harassment and abuse from her husband. Sue Osthoff, director of the National Clearinghouse for the Defense of Battered Women in Philadelphia, said she believes Becker-Grimshaw is the first woman to be allowed to use the defense in a Massachusetts trial.

In a courtroom packed with high school seniors on a law-class outing, the defendant detailed to the jury of 10 men and six women a life of beatings and molestation from the age of 9.

She testified that she was thrown out of her family's mobile home at 12 and lived with a man who also beat her. At 14, she bore a severely retarded and partially blind child she gave up for adoption 18 months later because of the difficulty of caring for him.

She met Grimshaw in 1978. In 1981, she bore his child and married him, she said, "so my son and I would have the same name."

Two months later she filed for divorce, but failed to follow through because of her husband's threats to turn her in to authorities for illegally holding a job while living on welfare payments, she testified.

She said on the stand that her husband often bruised her and twice broke her front teeth, once with a hammer, despite two restraining orders. She also testified that he followed her to her barroom job nearly every night and pounded at her door daily, begging his son to open it and promising to stop the beatings.

Once inside, he would destroy her work uniforms, she said.

"I think I let him in because I couldn't take it anymore," she said. "I called the police so many times they actually knew who I was."

She said officers claimed they were powerless to arrest Grimshaw unless he was caught inside her apartment, and the only time she filed assault charges she later dropped them because of his threats.

Becker-Grimshaw said the final straw came when her husband stole her apartment keys when she came to pick up her son from a day spent visiting him.

"I just sat there [in her apartment] waiting for him to show up at any moment," she said. "He was going to kill me."

She said she believed it would be impossible to escape. "I didn't have any choice, I didn't have any choice, I didn't have any choice at all."

She testified her boyfriend, Michael A.J. Bruyette, told her to bring her husband to a boat ramp in Chicopee, where he and Michael Ashey, then 16, allegedly jumped Grimshaw.

"When he [Grimshaw] got in the car, all I could think of was what he had done to me," she testified. She said she did not watch the beatings, but learned of Grimshaw's death through media reports the next day.

Cuts not likely to decrease addiction treatment delay

BOSTON (AP) — About 200 people are on a waiting list for drug and alcohol addiction treatment in Massachusetts and the Dukakis administration's new budget probably will not help decrease that number, says an alcohol-treatment advocate.

"People who are currently waiting for treatment are going to continue to wait," said Linda Perlmutter, director of the Massachusetts Alcohol and Drug Abuse Association. "The doors are virtually slammed shut."

An increase in federal aid to the programs is expected to be offset by cutbakcs in the state's funding of treatment costs.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has proposed $38,354,035 in state funding for treatment, down about $400,000 from last year's budget.

Dukakis vows to help receivers of rent subsidies

SOMERVILLE (AP) — The tenants of the 500-unit Clarendon Hill Towers apartment complex yesterday replaced fears of seeing their rent-subsidized homes sold out from under them with the hope that one day soon their homes will be their own.

"We still have much to do," said George Boag, a member of the tenants association. "But 18 months ago we hoped somebody would step in and save our homes. Now with a little help we can save them ourselves."

With Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in attendance, the tenants announced an agreement with developer William Maltz that gives them exclusive rights to buy the three-building complex.

The tenants association will still have to come up with the $24 million to buy the complex — they have until Nov. 1 to get the financing. But Dukakis said unequivocally, "We are going to raise the money."

The Clarendon Hill Towers agreement marks the first time in Massachusetts where tenants have organized to buy affordable housing built years ago by private developers with the federal mortgage financing.

It is one of 175 developments with about 30,000 units of rent-restricted housing in the state considered at risk of being placed on the open market, potentially forcing their low and moderate-income tenants to find new housing or pay higher rents.

Clarendon Hill Towers makes up to 15 percent of Somerville's affordable housing. About 70 percent of its tenants are low income, and half are elderly living on fixed incomes.

Owners of such housing, built in the 1960s and 1970s, have been given the option to prepay their 40-year mortgages after 20 years and then do what they want with the buildings.

Those 20-year limits are now coming to pass. Congress, trying to resolve what should be done about preserving affordable housing, enacted a two-year moratorium in 1987 retaining the low-income restrictions on the property.

But with that moratorium expiring this year, Massachusetts has been working with local officials and tenants about possible alternatives, such as the one at Clarendon Hill Towers.

Dukakis said the state is currently working on a half dozen projects as their mortgage prepayment dates approach.

"I pledge that the state will continue to be a partner in your efforts to preserve this affordable housing," he said, but added, "make no mistake, we need the federal government as a partner if we are to solve the problem."

Dukakis said he pressed that point in meetings with the state's congressional delegation and other lawmakers in Washington on Wednesday.

Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis, right, takes off his coat as he is greeted by William Maltz, left, of Clarendon Associates at the Clarendon Hill Towers apartments in Somerville yesterday.

"Next to putting food on the table, I don't think there's anything more important than having a nice place to live," Dukakis said.

Under the arrangement worked out at Clarendon Hill Towers, the non-profit tenants association would buy the development and the tenants would pay it rent equal to 30 percent of their income with some deductions. Rent would increase for about half of the tenants under the proposal and decrease for the other half.

Court strikes Lynn's pit bull regulations

BOSTON (AP) — Four laws passed by the city of Lynn to keep potentially dangerous pit bulls of the streets would give dog officers "unleashed discretion" to decide what is or isn't a pit bull, the state Supreme Court ruled yesterday in striking down the laws.

In a unanimous opinion, the high court upheld a lower court ruling that threw out three laws drafted by the city in 1985 and 1986 on the grounds that they were unconstitutionally vague because they threatened dog owners with punishments without clearly defining the owners' responsibilities.

The justices also noted that the city later passed a fourth ordinance — on June 30, 1987 — aimed at reining in pit bulls, a powerfully built breed that has sometimes been used for fighting.

Some of the dogs, which are popular in Lynn, have been involved in mauling of humans. The Lynn laws were aimed at requiring owners to keep pit bulls on their own property and provided for banishing problem dogs.

The high court ruled that the 1987 law superseded the earlier versions and technically rendered the dispute moot. But to save time, the Supreme Court went ahead and gave its legal analysis of the new law, which is still on the city's books.

Commenting first on the three earlier laws, the court said that because the law imposes penalties on violators, it must meet the standard of clarity required in criminal statutes — "sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited."

The problem in the case of pit bulls, the court said, is that the definition of the breed is too vague.

The judge who heard the case found "there is no scientific means, by blood, enzyme or otherwise, to determine if a dog is a particular breed or any mixture thereof." In addition, the city laws used "conflicting, subjective standards" for defining pit bulls and failed to provide police with clear direction.

The Celtics may be down but it's not all over yet

It's enough to make a grown man cry. In fact, it's enough to make a grown man, woman, or children cry. Have you taken a look at the Boston Celtics lately? It's a new season with a new head coach and the leprechaun has been taking it in the chin.

Josh Galitsky

This isn't the Boston Celtics team of old. This isn't the team of polished Championship rings and even more polished ball playing. The banners fly high above the parquet floor as the Bird man lies grounded.

The rest of the NBA circles overhead like vultures, ready to pick Boston's bones clean. But don't you dare hang up a wreath outside of the Garden. This team isn't buried yet.

It would reek like Michael Dukakis's concession speech to say that this is merely a "transition year" but that's exactly the case. This is a different looking team, a faster team and a deeper team. There's new blood inside those green uniforms and it's going to take some time to work all the kinks out.

First of all let's consider the coaching change. Certainly, KC Jones carried an air of respect and class. But Boston has deteriorated the last couple of years by being battered and beaten by playoff time. KC's failure to utilize the untapped talents of his bench was a crime.

Jimmy Rodgers understands the importance of his bench. He's polishing Reggie Lewis into a great player. He's demanding consistency from Jim Paxson. He's taking guys like Brad Lohaus, Mark Acres and Brian Shaw and working them so they don't end up the "Greg Kite's" of the future.

Let us also consider the veterans of the basketball war. Kevin McHale and Robert Parish are the blood and guts of this team in Bird's absence. Both men have never worked harder. Dennis Johnson and Danny Ainge can run with anybody in the league and are adjusting nicely to the Celtics' quicker style. And don't forget that someday, the man with the "rainbow-arc" jumpshot, will be back.

Let us not forget that the teams in the NBA have improved tremendously. Ballclubs like the Rockets, Cavaliers, Hawks, Pistons, Knicks and Portland are all pretty hot and the Bulls have Michael Jordan. The Lakers got lucky last year and this season their "magic" has run out. And of course, don't you ever count out the Boston Celtics. They are grittier than Johnny Most's voice and have more heart than Red Auerbach has cigars.

This season may have Boston in critical condition in the standings but you cannot kill Celtic pride . . .ever! Even though this season has been a stormy one, fans — take heart. There are sure to be future rainbows and pots of gold in Beantown.

Just a few notes from the Campus Center basement

Last week's visit by the controversial leader of the Nation of Islam Louis Farrakhan accomplished at least one thing — it uncovered some interesting types.

Rick Santos

One, Mordechai Levy, of the Jewish Defense Organization made contact with the Collegian to purchase two advertisements asking readers to join him in protesting what he called Farrakhan's anti-Semitic message.

Unfortunately the ads which Levy sent were not up to par with the Collegian's standards — they lacked taste. After a few long, exhausting conversations, in which Levy abused the Collegian for not wanting to print his original ad, an attorney representing the JDO called me.

He agreed to make the necessary changes in the ad — not without offering the unsolicitated information that he is a libel expert. When I asked if Levy would approve of the altered ad, the attorney said Levy had given him prior approval to agree to any changes.

Funny thing, the attorney, just like one of Levy's press agents who called the day of the Farrakhan speech, sounded suspiciously like Levy.

Do you think the UMass parking system is a mess? According to the 1986-1987 Fact Book (the most recent edition available), compiled by the Office of Institutional Research and Planning, there are 11,320 available parking spaces on campus and the number of vehicles annually registered for campus parking is 15,500.

I guess the school expects about one-third of those registered to park will choose to leave their cars at home — every day. Or maybe the E (formerly P) Lot near the baseball field actually extends to Pittsfield, thereby alloting for an infinite number of cars to park there.

On a more personal note, I will have graduated by this summer and am already looking for a job. I'm trying to get as much experience as possible by writing for the Collegian, stringing for United Press International, and attempting to sell my work wherever else possible.

But I feel inadequate because I'm not a member of the Real News Network. Last semester RNN published its first issue, which was a mimeographed copy of a Daily Hampshire Gazette story about anthrax research being conducted at UMass. Copies were posted all over campus with a message at the bottom: "Sponsored by the Real News Network: An alternative to the Collegian, whose editors seem to have trouble figuring out what the news is."

I've been trying to contact the network. My resume is ready as well as my clip file. But I can't for the life of me find these newshounds. If only I too could establish myself as a top-notch reporter by taking a pair of scissors, some paste, and a copying machine and ripping off the Gazette.

Anyone could be a potential victim of the Ku Klux Klan

When I was born, I was black.
When I grew up, I was black.
When I am sick, I am black.
When I go out in the sun, I am black.
When I am cold, I am black.
When I die, I will be black.
But you. . . When you are born you are pink.
When you grow up, you are white.
When you get sick, you are green.
When you are out in the sun, you are red.
When you are cold, you turn blue.
When you die, you turn purple.
And you have the nerve to call me colored.

Nicole B., 12
Miami, Florida

I have that poem on my door. I found it in The Miami Herald over the Intersession. It made a strong point to me, considering the age of the writer. I can sympathize with the anger she must have, even if I can not ever fully understand it.

Eric Jones

Last week the Ku Klux Klan was threatening to protest Farrakhan's speech. When I heard the rumor I became furious. Here, away from the strangling conservatism of my hometown, I was hoping to escape the racism which I had lived with my entire life. I wished to never again see a black and a white fighting over an issue of color. I wanted to get away from the racism and bigotry that had become such an intense part of the life around me. Seeing the KKK would just serve to remind me that people still judge other people on appearances. I felt they had no right to be on my campus promoting hatred among human beings, among brothers. My friends told me I had nothing to worry about. They said that I was the last person the KKK would ever hate. You see, I am white, Anglo-Saxon, and Christian.

Then why am I frightened of them? Because no one on this planet is safe from the ignorant hatred that groups like the KKK spews. Even those who do believe in white supremacy have reason to fear them.

Let us suppose that they somehow succeeded in their goal, and everyone within the borders of the United States was white and Christian. Who would be the next to be singled out? People with birth defects? Retarded people? People who have sex before marriage? Liberals? People with bad acne? Anyone who is not considered perfect would be in danger of being cast out by this new society. And if you think that would never happen, look at the KKK now, shunning those who have more pigment in their skin than they do. Where would it end? Would it ever end?

So often in my life I have seen black and white children playing together. When they are young, they have no conception of what racism is. As they grow older, they are taught the lies that one race is superior to the other. Then they go through life believing that they are better than other people.

A human being is a human being, no matter what label is otherwise put on them. Sure, some of us are different, but if you look past the surface, we're all different. That's what makes us grow and thrive as a species. We have such diverse ideas and abilities that nothing is beyond our reach. But that is only if we work together. We have too much at stake in our development to let stupid things like color and religion to stand in our way. So if anyone in the KKK is reading this, just remember — stay away from this campus. No one wants you or your propoganda here, even me, who supposedly has nothing to fear from you.

ARTS & LIVING

Jazz is the word for Pat Metheny and Co. at FAC

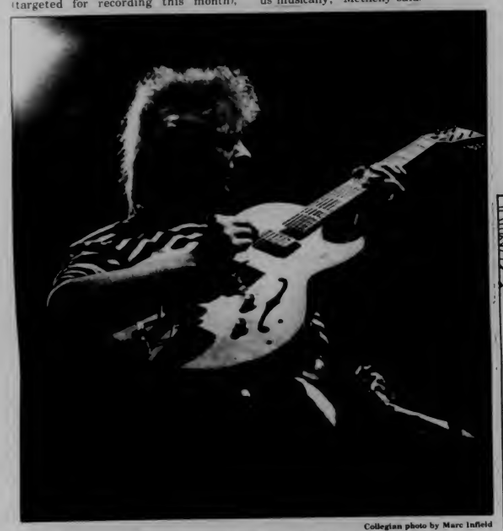
By COSMO MACERO Jr.
Collegian Staff

The Pat Metheny Group works in such a way that a genuine relationship develops during each performance, aligning the band members on a curvaceous but solidified musical plane. Wednesday night at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, that plane extended to an audience of 1,600 as Metheny and his jazz-freak companions booked a 3 hour trip into the stratosphere of tonality and improvisation.

Opting primarily for a program of new, unnamed, previously unheard material (targeted for recording this month), Metheny touched on his favorite subjects, weaving bop-like shuffles with silky smooth guitar lines, multi-part percussion and embellishing keyboards.

Clearly noticeable was the band's strong sense of confidence and stability. Jazz is a medium of free-form. Metheny wasn't out to impress anybody, nor was he hiding behind barriers of volume or flash. It was merely a case of 'here's the music, hope you like it.'

"We're all very critical of ourselves. It's rare that the audience will have an effect on our performance, but in a case where the audience reaction is so weird, it may effect us musically," Metheny said.



Collegian photo by Marc Infield

Pat Metheny lets loose at the FAC Wednesday night.

Shifting between a semi-hollowbody electric, a guitar synth controller and an acoustic, Metheny demonstrated an extensive vocabulary of guitar voicings, all developed within the complex arrangements put together by himself and longtime keyboardist Lyle Mays.

"I like to write a lot when I'm off the road. I take things that I've got on tape and work them into things that we can do as a band," he said.

With 14 albums in 12 years, it would seem Metheny has an endless well of ideas and material. In addition to his own work, he's been called upon to collaborate with practically everyone from Gary Burton to Michael Brecker to Ornette Coleman.

In 1985, Metheny and Lyle Mays composed the soundtrack for The Falcon and the Snowman (Sean Penn, Timothy Hutton).

"When a movie gets made, the last thing to get done is the music. Not only do you have to custom write the music to fit the mood of the scenes, you have to make sure it's 20.2 seconds long or whatever," he said.

Wednesday night's show featured compositions which built to a slow, rolling boil, eventually stirring to an overflowing climax of melody, harmony and percussion (when's the last time you heard an exciting percussion solo . . . of any kind?). Drummer Paul Wertico, percussionist Armando Marcal and multi-instrumentalist/vocalist David Blamires added exciting, and sometimes breathtaking elements to each piece.

Hand picked, Pat Metheny's band is the perfect compliment to his celebrated fretboard and compositional skills.

Metheny has been recognized over the last ten years as the premiere contemporary jazz guitarist. In 1976, when Bright Size Life was released (with the late Jaco Pastorius on bass) the fusion movement was in full tilt, although its innovator John McLaughlin had moved from the spotlight. As a self described jazz musician, Metheny cares little for the term which marries jazz and rock.

"I really don't like the word fusion . . . because it describes something that isn't really there. Jazz is the best word because it means exactly what we're all about . . . improvisation," he said.

"I liked the fusion stuff, but there were so many imitators and not a lot of innovators. I don't really have any stylistic prejudices. Every musician should play the music they love, whether it's country, rock, funk or jazz. It just has to be honest."

Radiators heat up for a night of Phisheading at SUB

By JOHN SWANSON
and COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

Tonight in the Student Union Ballroom, it's the Night of the Fish . . . or the Night of the Phish, depending on which act you're referring to.

The Radiators, a New Orleans combo whose will headline the show, invented their own genre of "Fishhead Music" to prevent easy categorization of their eclectic sound. Their influences include country, cajun and calypso as well as the stuff your older brother used to listen to: Little Feat, The Band and Grateful Dead aren't a bad starting point.

The Radiators' first album, entitled Work Done On Premises, was a two-album set recorded live in a New Orleans club and released in 1980. The band now has over 200 songs in its live repertoire. In 1982, the band recorded Heat Generation in the studio.

The band's most recent release, The Law of the Fish, mixes pop-flavored keyboard voicings with hard-edged, almost metallic, guitar lines. Relegated to the cutout bins much earlier than expected, Law's hook-laden tunes fetched critical acclaim sans commerical success.

Phish, the opening act from Burlington, VT, have stormed to New England cult fame in addition to garnering an encouraging measure of success, nationwide. Guitarist-songwriter Trey Anastasio is influenced by artists ranging from Jimmy Page to Frank Zappa.

A popular attraction at Sheehan's in Northampton, Phish build their shows around dynamic musicianship, endearing stage presence and an appetite for fun.

In a Collegian interview last semester, Anastasio said "Our audiences are great. People come to our shows and they request our originals. That's just great."

While Burlington is fast becoming a spawning-ground for exciting new bands, Phish hopes to branch out and find success on their terms.

Phish plan to release a double album as their debut disc.

"We can't decide which are our best songs and our songs are like 14 minutes long," Anastasio said. "We're going to record what we think is good, and if people don't like it, fuck it."

Tickets for the Union Program Council production are $6 for students, $8 for un-students, and can be purchased at Tix, For The Record and Main St. Records.

Kill off the weekend with a Five Coll. flick or tune

If you're convinced that you've got nothing to do this weekend, guess again. There's movies, theatre, dance and music in the happy valley this weekend, and here's a quick rundown what's where and when.

Moviewise, it seems to be leading women weekend at Mt. Holyoke and Amherst. Amherst has Moonstruck at their Campus Center Auditorium tonight, tomorrow, and Sunday at 8 and 10.

If Cher is not your favorite actress, how about Jane Fonda? Mt. Holyoke is showing The China Syndrome tonight at 7 and 9 in the Gamble Auditorium. Call the colleges for admission information.

Also at Mt. Holyoke is also showing A Room with a View. It'll be in the Gamble auditorium at 7 and 9 tomorrow.

If it's theater you're looking for, Hampshire College is the place and Anton Chekhov's The Seagull is the play. It'll be shown tonight and tomorrow in the Emily Dickinson Hall. Call Hampshire for price information.

Still not satisfied? Looking for dance perhaps? There's an MFA dance concert at Smith College tonight and tomorrow in the Scott Dance room at 8. Call 585-3232 (mornings) for information.

If after all this you're still convinced that it's best to stay home, well, how about some music? Tomorrow the Fourth Annual Sr. Honors Band will perform in the UMass concert hall. Featuring outstanding instrumentalists from high schools throughout the East, the concert begins at 7, and it's free.

Also on Saturday, guitarist Phillip de Fremery will perform in Buckley recital hall at Amherst. The concert begins at 8:15, and is free.

On Sunday the Bowker Auditorium at UMass will feature a faculty jazz concert featuring Jeff Holmes and guest artists. Holmes will perform new works, from solo to octet performances. The concert begins at 8, call 545-2511 for ticket information.

Also on Sunday, singer/songwriter Si Kahn will perform two concerts at the Iron Horse Cafe to benefit the Western Massachusetts Food Bank. Described by The New York Times as "a leading member of the current generation of activist folksingers," Kahn will perform at 6:30 and 8:30. Call Iron Horse at 584-0610 for ticket information.

Previews, and Fox folly

By JIM COLE
Collegian Staff

This column usually consists of one or two film reviews with some useless tidbits thrown in at the end. This week the choice of films at the nearby theaters was not up to par, so most of the column will be nothing but useless tidbits.

Besides favorites like The Accidental Tourist, and Rain Man, the offerings of late are quite poor. Comedies like Who's Harry Crumb and Her Alibi both waste the talents of John Candy and Tom Selleck, respectively. And Beaches, while well acted by Bette Midler and Barbara Hershey, is still manipulative. It's your choice.

There is a little more variety at the "little"cinemas in the area. Women on the Edge of a Nervous Breakdown is playing at the Academy of Music in Northampton. A very non-mainstream film, I've heard good things about it. And The Twenty-first Annual Festival of Animation is playing at the Pleasant Street Theater, also in Northampton. Featuring more adult-oriented works, it's worth a look.

There does seem to be brighter days on the horizon, with some fresh films arriving. The Fly II already has one strike against it with the terrible ad campaign Twentieth Century Fox has been using, but there is still a chance it might be good, since it stars Eric Stoltz (Mask) as 'Brundlefly's' offspring Martin Brundle, whose only 'abnormality' is that he has aged over twenty years in only five. When he discovers the truth about his father's ill-fated research, he's determined to correct the genetic defect before it's too late. Daphne Zuniga (The Sure Thing) co-stars.

Other openings include Tap, starring Gregory Hines as a (what else?) tap dancer and the story of his rise to fame. Doesn't sound like the most interesting plot, but it has gotten some good reviews. Lastly, Parents is a very dark comedy that might never arrive here, which would be a shame. A 1950's nostalgia piece about a little boy who wonders if his parents are cannibals, (yes, cannibals), it stars Randy Quaid and Mary Beth Hurt, and is directed by first-timer Bob Balaban (the bearded interpreter in Close Encounters). This one sounds great, so lets hope to see it here soon.

Moving on, I thought I'd try something different this week. Recently, I phoned Twentieth Century Fox (them again) just to get more information on The Fly II. What follows is some of the conversation:

"Twentieth Century Fox."

"Hello, my name is Jim Cole, I'm with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, and I was wondering who I'd talk to about publicity."

"Sir, this is Twentieth Century Fox!!" (She obviously heard me wrong and thought I was trying to call the Collegian.)

"Yes, I know that. I'm calling from the Mass. Daily Collegian."

"Who do you want to speak to? Where did you get this number!?"

"I'm trying to get some information about your releases."

"That's Publicity. They're in New York."

"Oh, well could I please have the number?"

With that, the lady begrudgingly complied. Luckily, the lady I spoke to in New York was most helpful, even cheerful. I learned two things from this: you better know someone "out there," when you call, or they won't take you seriously (I mistakenly thought being film columnist at "New England's Largest College Daily"wouldn't hurt), and until you get the right department, you're on hold for eternity. If this conversation is an example of what awaits me as an aspiring filmmaker, I'd better fasten my seat belt — it's gonna be a rough ride.

At least our upcoming interviews for Disco II: The Revenge will be better, I hope. 'Till next time.

President outlines 1990 budget agenda

Asks for 1-year defense spending freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, making his first major speech to Congress, yesterday proposed a $1.6 trillion "common sense" budget for fiscal 1990 that calls for less military but greater domestic spending than sought by President Reagan.

The plan, which features a one-year freeze on scores of federal programs, is an overhaul of the budget submitted by former President Reagan last month and carries out Bush's oft-stated campaign vow of not seeking any increase in taxes.

It was to be outlined by Bush at a 9 p.m. EST nationally televised speech to a joint session of Congress.

Bush's budget outline was described as a "common-sense approach to budgeting" in a fact sheet distributed in advance of the president's address to Congress.

The president's budget calls for a one-year freeze on defense spending at the levels of inflation.

And, it projects a federal deficit in the fiscal year that begins next Oct. 1 of $94.8 billion — well within the $100 billion limit set by the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law. If the sale of government assets are included, the deficit would be even lower — $91.1 billion.

Bush's budget amendments call for an overall budget surplus of $3.8 billion by 1993.

He reviewed and put finishing touches on the address earlier in the day and gave his Cabinet a preview at an early afternoon meeting, said spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

"He's happy with the budget and eager to get on with the Bush initiatives," Fitzwater said.

Bush's first presidential speech to Congress was expected to mix campaign promises with expressions of budget restraint and new overtures toward bipartisanship.

But it also comes at a time of early strain in Bush's efforts to extend an "offered hand" to Congress as the Senate Armed Services Committee is engaged in a protracted and divisive confirmation struggle over Bush's nomination of former Sen. John Tower as defense secretary.

Bush's budget proposes increased spending for education, the homeless, environmental cleanup and the repair of deteriorated nuclear weapons plants, according to administration and congressional sources.

The budget also proposes tax breaks to partially offset child care and adoption expenses and to encourage commercial investment in inner cities. Bush, a Texan and former oil-industry executive, is proposing tax incentives for oil and gas exploration, the source said.

He is also seeking a reduction in the tax on most capital gains — profits from sales of stocks, real estate and other assets. Capital gains and most other income now are taxed at rates of 15 percent, 28 percent or 33 percent.

Bush claims the proposal would generate $4 billion or so in revenue by stimulating new business investment, but many economists have disputed this and the proposal has already encountered stiff Democratic opposition.

HOROSCOPE

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be willing to play a more helpful role and you will reap many rewards. Be alert to time-saving innovations that can increase productivity. Romance takes an interesting twist. Play a waiting game.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Personal choices enjoy positive influences today. Assert yourself quietly but firmly in difficult situations. Others appreciate you more when they know you will stand up for your rights. Be consistent.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study research materials carefully before making presentations. Be more aggressive about developing new clientele. Remodeling a house brings emotional satisfaction as well as creature comforts. You know exactly what you want.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Loved one helps you solve an old mystery. Certain revelations allow you to decide the wisest course to follow. Romance looks good — if you face reality. Partner is unlikely to change.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Variety suits you very well today. Work at home if possible. Family members look to you for leadership. Do not let them down! You need to surrender some ego to recapture lost romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Co-workers advance some excellent suggestions. Putting new ideas into action will lighten the workload and increase earnings. By late afternoon, you feel on top of things. Your social life is on the upswing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Playing a new role could bring moderate gains at work. At home, divide up the chores more fairly. A candid chat uncovers hidden resentments. Be a good listener. Better communication results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get an early start today so that you can nose out the competition. Gather the materials you need to prepare income tax returns. Spend quality time with each of your offspring.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A change of employment could mean less money until you get the hang of things. A friend could appear overly curious about your personal affairs. Deflect probing questions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A constructive conversation with a co-worker could result in productive teamwork. Influential person has an eye on you. A promotion or raise is in the offing. Redouble your efforts. Success beckons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Write overdue letters and make important phone calls. Caution is advised to protect your financial security. A premature disclosure could harm a pet project.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your business and personal affairs strictly separate. Travel lets you clinch a favorable agreement or cement a partnership. Set a good example for a young person by curbing spending. Build savings.

meet," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "We're not going to roll over and play dead, though."

The loss does force some changes in the lineup which will be less than helpful, though right now Yarworth is unsure of what those changes will be. One possible move is putting Frank Sampson in the 1000-yard freestyle, but this would weaken UMass' 200-yard individual medley.

"I haven't really decided yet," Yarworth said.

To increase the trouble, the Minutemen will be facing a Terrier crew which still has last season's meet fresh in mind. A year ago, the UMass-B.U. confrontation at Boyden Pool came down to the final event. Boston University lost that event, the 400-yard freestyle relay, by a tenth of a second and lost the meet, 109-108. They are spoiling for a rematch.

The Terriers have a good team this year led by Scott Riewald, who is a good sprinter and medley swimmer. Other top B.U. swimmers are Chris Lalor in the backstroke, Jeff White, a versatile freestyler and Tom Foley in the butterfly. Diver Joel Beck should give UMass diver Dan Chesnicka some good competition.

This is the last hurdle the Minutemen face before the New England Championships. UMass does expect Robertson and Riddell to be healthy for the championships, but they will be sorely missed for this Saturday's meet with the Terriers.

men's track

While O'Brien fully expects to be in the top five, he admits that winning is somewhat of a longshot.

"We need to hit everything," he said. "There is no margin for error as far as we're concerned. We can't afford to have less than the best from anyone."

According to O'Brien, UMass will be "very strong in the sprints, middle distance and hurdles." On the other side of the coin are the jumping and throwing competitions.

"We are naturally weak in those areas because we lack an indoor facility," O'Brien said.

UMass athletes will be going up against some of the top performers in the East. Michael Lewis (Southern Conn.) was the NCAA Division II runner-up in the 800; Maury Bonner (a Texan who migrated to Holy Cross) has drawn rave reviews in the sprints, and Ed Davis (University of New Haven) is the defending Eastern long jump champion.

"I'll experiment with some kids, but this is a team championship," said O'Brien. "We want to put our best batting order together.

"This is the exciting part of the season. We want to do well."

skiing

"The cold air will make the slopes hard and fast, very good for skiing. We like that," he said. "Loon has a long and interesting (giant slalom)."

He hopes the combination of favorable conditions and a good course will give his team good results.

The men are led by juniors John Roche and Rick D'Elia, whom MacConnell called his "best and experienced skiers." The duo has helped UMass to third place in the standings, behind Boston College and Plymouth State. During last Sunday's slalom the two were plagued by the weather and each fell on their first run.

For the women, Elise McDevitt has been the most consistent skier this season. She had a rough last weekend, falling on both days, but MacConnell is hoping for a comeback this weekend.

After McDevitt comes Marcy Blacker and Mary Sinton, both capable of doing damage this weekend.

"If they're lucky, they should be first," MacConnell said, but also stated that they will have a tough time with B.C., a team with five tough skiers.

And one other Minuteman who is a regular part of the starting six but who been sidelined for two weeks because of a small muscle tear in the arch of his foot, is senior Jay Ronayne. This appears to be a good time to bring Ronayne back.

"This is a real good meet to get him back into shape," Johnson said.

MIT's high watermark this season has been a 200.4 team total. UMass hit 259 in its last meet, a win over Southern Connecticut State University, and the Minutemen have not scored lower than 230 this season.

Her throwing corps of Tina White, Helen Balodouras, Simone Marisseau, and Diane Ozzolek had very good results at Ocean State. In her debut, White set the school record in the 20-pound indoor weight and qualified herself for the New England's.

Balodouras also qualified for the N.E. in the indoor weight, placing fifth with a throw of 38-6 1/2, and also finished fourth in the shot put. Marisseau set a personal-record best in the shot with a distance of 37-4 and threw 31 feet in the weight. "She starting to come on really strong. She's only a sophomore," said LaFreniere. Ozzolek threw the weight 31-4 1/2, which was not good enough to place, but LaFreniere adds that she is getting more consistent.

Another highlight from last week's meet was senior Shana Smith, who finished fourth in the mile with a time of 5:08.4. The entire team will be back in action at Dartmouth with Fitchburg Saturday, where the runners and throwers will have their last chance to qualify for the New England's and the ECAC's.

"If we go up there and hit our routines, regardless of the win or the loss, we can come away with a very good regional qualifying score," said UMass coach Alfie Mitchell. "It's very important for us to have a good showing, we can't blow this chance while we have it."

The Minutewomen will head north with a relatively healthy crew (minus the long-term losses of Kristin Turmail and Enya Hlozik), and a good head of steam. In their most recent competition, UMass overcame a late rush at Yale to enjoy a 175.2 to 173.9 win. Since then, some fine tuning in the vault and balance beam lineup has primed the team for an even stiffer challenge this weekend.

"They're as ready as they're going to be," said Mitchell, "It can be a very close meet if things go as they should."

The Wildcats, meanwhile, have spent the week resting up after hosting squads from Iowa, Iowa St. and Michigan St. at their annual "UNH Invitational" this past weekend. While finishing third out of the four teams competing, UNH rewrote their all-time scoring mark with 182.55 points.

UNH was led by Brady, who set her own personal high all around mark with a 37.20, tops of all the weekend's competitors.

(three points) were outscored by Kenny Green and Bonzie Colson, 26-5.

You'd need a search light to find any bright spots for the Minutemen, they were dominated in almost every aspect of the game. Jim McCoy did have 29 points to lead all scorers and transfer George Hardin played very aggressively for the Minutemen, scoring 11 points before fouling out.

"You can't ever be pleased with a loss, and I'm not. But I am pleased with a couple of players on our team. I thought Jim McCoy made an effort to play the whole game, Anton Brown (14 points) at times played pretty well, and George gave us a little bit," Calipari said.

The inside again proved to be the Achilles heel for the Minutemen in the first half, as Rhode Island exploded to a 17-point halftime edge. Again UMass couldn't spread around its offense enough to keep the opposition off balance. McCoy was near par with 13 first-half points and Brown had eight, but no other Minuteman could manage more than three points. The Rams also had unanswered spurts of five, six and eight points to stretch the lead out 49-32 going into the lockers.

Hoop teams treated rudely on the road

• Rhode Island gets their revenge on the Minutemen, 100-76

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — They shoot horses when they suffer this much; unfortunately no one was here to put the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team out of its misery when it lost, 100-76 last night to the University of Rhode Island at Keaney Gymnasium.

The Rams dominated throughout their 24-point blowout, reaching the century mark for only the second time this year. UMass was torched for 100 points for the fifth time this season.

In fact, it was such a runaway that, with five minutes left in the game, all of the 4,143 fans at Keaney began a loud, stomping chant: "We want Eitner, we want Eitner" — a call for URI's seven-foot freshman center, who has played only six minutes so far this season. The chant is the equivalent to most home gymnasiums' "na na na na, hey hey hey, goodbye."

Rhode Island, 100-76

Massachusetts (76): Jim McCoy 11 4-5 29, John Tate 0 2-2 2, John Milum 1 2-3 5, Anton Brown 4 3-4 14, Rafer Giles 2 1-2 6, Michael Byrnes 2 0-0 5, Ishmael Butler 0 1-2 1, Matt Anderson 1 0-0 2, George Hardin 4 3-4 11, Cary Herrer 0 1-4 1, Ben Grodski: 1 0-0 2, Sean Nelen 0 0-0 0; Chris Bailey 0-0-0 Totals: 26 16-25 76

Rhode Island (100): Kenny Green 5 2-2 12, John Evans 8 2-3 19, Bonzie Colson 3 8-10 14, Herb Dixon 7 1-2 16, Eric Leslie 8 3-4 19, Mergin Sina 0 1-2 1; Jeff Kent 4 2-2 10, Steve Lane 1 1-2 3, James Eitner 0 0-0 0; Andre Green 1 2-2 4 Totals: 37 22-29 100

Three-point goals: McCoy 3, Brown 3, Dixon 3, Giles, Byrnes, Evans

The Minutemen trailed 14-6 only five minutes into the game, and few people (they were dressed in blue) believed it could actually get worse. After a 17-point halftime hole, the closest UMass could get was 13 points midway through the second half.

"In the first ten minutes of the second half, we came to play and made a run at them, but the first half was it," UMass coach John Calipari said.

The deficit was largely in part to the Minutemen's inability to again control the middle, as they were outrebounded by the taller Rams, 51-34. UMass center John John Tate and the Minutemen couldn't make it a sweep, as Rhode Island romped to a 100-76 win last night in Kingston, RI.

Tate (after a career-high 24 against Holy Cross on Monday) picked up his fourth foul only one minute into the second half, and was eventually sent packing for good with five minutes left. Tate left with only two points (he did continue his free throw streak to 18 straight).

In the battle of the tall timber, Tate and John Milum

• League-leading Temple blitzes UM women, 67-46

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

It isn't a strange sight to see a Temple basketball team atop the standings of the Atlantic 10 conference; but it is surprising that it is the women, not the men, who reside there.

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team found out last night why the Lady Owls are in first place and the only undefeated team in the A-10. Temple handed the Minutewomen a 67-46 loss at McGonigle Hall.

With the win, the Owls are now 11-0 in the conference and 15-3 overall. UMass once again dips below the .500 mark for the year at 9-10, 4-7 in the league.

Much like in the 84-70 win by Temple on Jan. 7 at the Cage, the Owls set the tone for this one early, sprinting out to a 30-16 halftime lead and never looking back.

Senior guard Pam Balogh was high scorer with 20 for Temple, followed by Kim Reardon with 13 and Karen Healey with 12. Junior Kelly Lane pulled down 11 rebounds. Sophomore forward Keyburn McCusker was the only UMass player in double figures, knocking in 14.

From here the Minutewomen trek to the nation's capital, looking to get their game back on track against the Colonial Women of George Washington tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Much like Temple, the Minutewomen will be looking to atone for a home loss. GW sports only a 6-13 mark on the year, but included in that was a 74-54 drubbing at the Cage on Jan. 5.

In that game, the Minutewomen were bothered by just 9-of-25 shooting in the first half, as they spotted GW a 35-21 lead after 20 minutes. Karin Vadelund scored 23 points and Ginny Doyle 18 for the Colonial Women.

The pair are currently 2-3 in scoring for GW this year, behind team leader Tracey Earley. Earley is averaging 17.6 points a game, while Vadelund is going at a 15.5 clip and Doyle at 9.4.

Men's swimming visits B.U.

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team just had a tough meet get tougher.

Tomorrow the Minutemen are scheduled to battle a revenge-minded Boston University team without at least one and possibly two of their top swimmers.

Jim Robertson, ranked among the top two or three in New England in the 1000-, 500- and 200-yard freestyles, is a scratch for tomorrow's meet after coming down with mononucleosis. Teammate and roommate Will Riddell, a distance freestyler, butterflyer and team co-captain, is also a possible loss as he too has been under the weather.

"This doesn't bode well for the B.U.

Men's track heads for EIAA

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team will compete in the Easterns at Southern Connecticut on Sunday. UMass competed in the championship last year and finished in third place behind Southern Conn., and Maine and in front of Vermont and New Hampshire.

Things at the top should not be much different this year, according to UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

'I expect the same five teams to battle it out," O'Brien said. "UVM and UNH are more improved than anyone else. They have a chance to beat Southern."

Skiers trek north to Loon Mt.

By ROBERT SIMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

If you gathered all the snow that has fallen around here this winter, you might have enough to make a snowball.

In the meantime, New England skiers have to make do with the man-made stuff. This weekend the University of Massachusetts men's and women's slalom ski teams head to Lincoln, N.H. in their search for snow. Coach Bill MacConnell is taking his troops to Loon Mountain and foresees a good weekend for his teams, or at least better than last weekend in Plymouth, N.H.

"We were very discouraged by last week," MacConnell said. His team was frustrated by bad weather, but the forecast is better for this weekend.

Men's gymnastics team to do battle with M.I.T.

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will be taking a couple steps down this weekend, down from Division I to III.

No, the Minutemen haven't been demoted. But tomorrow, UMass will hit the floor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Though MIT is a Division I school in academics, they are a Division III school in athletics.

There is one very big difference between a Division I and a Division III school. Coaches for Division III programs are not allowed to recruit so everyone is a walk-on.

But the Engineers from MIT are a good Division III team. The Engineers are 4-1 on the season, their only loss being to Springfield College.

MIT is led by senior co-captain Eric Reifschneider. The St. Louis native was co-ECAC gymnast of the week ending January 30. His high total in the all-around this season is 44.75.

But's that's not that scary for the Minutemen. UMass coach Roy Johnson could throw five guys at MIT that could break 50. But he won't do that.

"We're going to go with a little watered down lineup," Johnson said. "We'll give some guys some rest and see what some of the young guys can do."

One not so young guy that will see some action for the first time in awhile is senior Greg McCall. McCall is a senior but has not been a part of the starting lineup for the last couple of years. Johnson has McCall slated for every event with the exception of the horizontal bar.

Freshman Tom Wolkner (on the pommel horse and horizontal bar) and junior Greg Olson (floor exercise, pommel horse) along with junior Rich Healey are all normally reserves for the Minutemen but will get a chance to perform this weekend.

Unbeaten Minutewomen preparing to face U.N.H.

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Pick a motive, any motive. Threre's plenty of reasons for the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team to get excited about tomorrow's date at arch-rival New Hampshire (1 p.m.).

First there's the envy/Goliath factor. The scholarship-rich Wildcats have traditionally milked some of the Commonwealth's best gymnastics talent out from under its own flagship's nose (UNH's top gun, in fact, is freshman Lori Brady, late of Pocasset, MA). They've also piled up 113 wins in the last nine years, seven of those seasons were capped appearances at the post-season regional meet.

Then there's the issue of personal pride. The Minutewomen enter this meet at an unblemished 4-0 (their best start in at least six seasons), and with several statistically inferior teams around the next bend on the schedule, a possible undefeated season could hinge on tomorrow's results.

And finally, in the big picture, some hefty scores tomorrow for UMass would set the stage for a late-season cruise into the post-season regional meet.

Any woman interested in trying out for the University of Massachusetts softball team is asked to contact Elaine Sortino, head coach, at 545-2342 weekdays between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m., or at 256-1512 during the evening.

Today, mostly sunny, high in the low 30s. Tomorrow, warmer, chance of showers.

Dormitories lose hot water Friday

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts were left out in the cold Friday when a critical drop in the water level forced a campus-wide shutdown of hot water utilities, leaving some areas completely without services.

Physical Plant Director of Operations Peter Wozniak said the two water towers in Orchard Hill, which maintain water pressure for the entire University, are usually filled every day by the Town of Amherst.

Late Thursday night, however, an alarm was sounded because the towers, which normally hold hundreds of thousands of gallons, barely dipped below the 40-foot water level, Wozniak said.

"It hadn't been refilled," he said. "At that point, it was an alarm. The water pressure wasn't high enough for a high level facility."

When attempts to locate a water main break or a hydrant fissure turned up empty, Wozniak said workers cut off heating utilities early Friday morning to conserve water.

"That limits people from wanting to take a shower when it's ice cold," he said. "If it had gotten more severe, we would've shut it down completely."

Various signs were posted on bathroom doors reading, "Conserve water. The town of Amherst is having a major water crisis," but on Friday, many students were angered by the lack of notice.

"There was no advance warning," said Mackimmie resident Matthew Happy. "We pay for hot water, we should have hot water."

Cashin resident Lillian Magarinos said she was upset when she discovered the hot water was cut off to her dormitory.

"It's kind of unfair, they give us no hot water with such short notice," Magarinos said.

First-year student Matthew Parker said although water was supplied to Kennedy Residence Hall, it was too cold to shower under.

"My friend just tried to get into the shower," Parker said. "He tried for two minutes but it's too cold."

Wozniak said there was not enough time to notify students because workers were attempting to locate the problem during a time where water usage is high.

"When students are preparing to go to school, the water level drops 10 or 11 feet," he said. "At that point, it really is tough to get the word out fast enough to let folks know what's going on."

Hot water was restored to residence halls early Friday evening and although Wozniak said the cause of tem-

Amherst NOW chapter sought

By JANINE WARNER

The National Organization of Women may soon have a local chapter in Amherst, according to two University of Massachusetts students who are applying today to establish a Registered Student Organization.

Joanne Gray, a sophmore engineering major, and Leah Callahan, a sophomore women's studies/philosophy major, held a meeting last night with 22 new voting members to ratify a constitution, elect officers and prepare paperwork necessary to apply for RSO status.

"We have full support from the Boston chapter of NOW," Gray said, "and are working to elicite support from the university and other local organizations."

According to their constitution, the group's goal is to educate and take action to bring women into full participation in the mainstream of American society.

Gray said their current focus is on the April 19 March for Women's Equality in Washington DC, but future plans include: campus education on feminism; safety on campus; and writing letters supporting pro-choice legislation, the equal rights amendment, and university funding.

According to Callahan, to achieve RSO status the group must have at least 10 full-time student members, maintain a membership with at least 51 percent undergraduate

Amherst College to file suit

Seeks $3,112 in damages from UMass

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Amherst College intends to file suit against the University of Massachusetts for damages the school sustained during December's snowball fight, officials said.

The College wants to recover $3,112 in damage inflicted upon their property and wants the University to pay for any overlapping medical costs not covered by the insurance of an Amherst freshmen whose eye was injured in the snowball exchange.

The student was hit by a snowball containing a rock.

Amherst Dean of Students Benson Lieber said the snowball fights have been a cause for alarm for the past three years, with damage totals rising steadily each year.

Although a system has been devised to alert the Amherst campus that the snow assault team has left the UMass campus, this has been the only successful measure taken by security to reduce casualties to the school and its students. Even so, the system has only been marginally useful since the timing of the fight is unpredictable.

Two years ago the university paid over $3,000 to Amherst College for damages the school received during the annual snowfight.

Amherst says UMass still owes it $1,788 from last years bombardment of rock-laden snowballs but UMass Chancellor Joseph

New Africa House: One year later

From Collegian Staff Reports

The Central Residential Area was relatively quiet over the weekend. Some students left campus, some partied, and others studied, but as a whole the area was quiet.

This contrasts the roar that came from a building in Central one year ago, when following a racially-motivated assault, the campus became national news for a second time in as many years.

The roar came from the 150 minority students who occupied New Africa House, home of the W.E.B DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies, for five days, demanding a strong administrative response to what many ... and blatant expressions of racism on campus.

The impetus for the occupation was a racially-motivated fight from the previous weekend. On Feb. 6, 1988, a fight erupted near the Sylvan Residential Area. Five UMass students and the younger brother of one of the five were accused of attacking two black students following a party.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who negotiated with the students on their list of demands, said yesterday he felt that "by and large, commitments, when they were made, were fulfilled."

The chancellor, who said last year that he felt "great admiration for the students I have worked with," said yesterday that "a number of people, working together, have been able to make that event into something positive."

Official says lay-offs may not effect UHS

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The recent lay-offs at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton should not affect emergency treatment at University Health Services, said Director David Kraft.

"A lot of the services that are provided over there we provide here," he said.

"We're all concerned about it," he said, but "until I can see more about how it's going to affect my patients, I'd just assume not raise the panic level any higher than it already is."

Cooley-Dickinson is only used by UHS when a patient is too ill or badly hurt to be treated on campus, for surgery, or for the delivery of babies, he said.

Last year for example, Kraft said, some 110 babies of UMass faculty, staff, and students were delivered at the hospital.

On any given day there are one to three patients from UMass being treated at Cooley-Dickinson, he said.

Kraft said the lay-offs do not affect physicians because the hospital does not employee any directly. Admitted patients are treated by the same doctor that sends them to the hospital.

UHS treats most patients that need hospitalization, on campus, in a 20-bed facility adjacent to the clinics, Kraft said.

Usually, only five to 10 beds are occupied at any one time, Kraft said.

Right now Kraft has no plans to shift hospitals in emergency cases but he is watching the situation closely and keeping an eye on the quality of the services offered by Cooley-Dickinson, he said.

If hospitals do need to be changed, the nearest hospitals are in Greenfield and Springfield, he said.

Lately, the biggest problem UHS is facing is a particularly resistant strain of the flu, Kraft said.

The bug this year is causing more aches, pains, and fever than last season's version which was stomach orientated, said Kraft.

"People think they have gotten over it, then a couple of days later they feel groggy again," he said.

But, Kraft said, this year's bug is not to severe, the treatment for most people is plenty of rest.

Three plead innocent to cocaine trafficking charges

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Three Springfield men, reputed by police to be the largest drug suppliers to the University of Massachusetts, pleaded innocent last Thursday to charges of cocaine trafficking.

The men had been arrested Wednesday night in the parking lot of the Price Chopper Supermarket on University Drive when police said they confiscated close to 100 grams of the illegal narcotic.

The arrests took place on the same evening as arrest of Nikko Stefani at UMass on similar charges reported in the Collegian last week, making it the second bust University police have participated in the two weeks school has been in session.

Two of the men were ordered held on $10,000 bail each while the third man was released on his own recognizance after he told the judge he was not involved in the drug transaction and was shopping at the time.

Arrested were Louis J. Rogers, 19, Kwasi Oduro Tandoh, 19, and William M. Tripp III, all of Springfield.

All three pleaded innocent to the charges of cocaine traf ficking charges before Northampton District Court Judge Alvertus J. Morse and had their cases continued to Feb. 17 for pre-trial conferences.

UMass police worked in conjuction with Amherst Police and the state police drug task force attached to the Northwestern District Attorneys office to investigate the three men.

State police Sgt. Mark MacDonald said the seized cocaine had a street value of $25,000 and he believes the men to be "reasonably big suppliers to the area."

MacDonald said the drug sale was made during a "prearranged meeting" in the parking lot at 8:15 p.m.

He said he did not know the purity of the drugs they seized but much of it was in rock form. The drugs were sent to a state laboratory in Boston to be analyzed.

Roger's attorney, John Drake, told Morse Rogers had agreed to give a female student at UMass a ride to Price Chopper while at the school when the other two men asked if they could go along.

Rogers was arrested after the other two men had been cuffed, as he emerged from the supermarket. The female student was not held for any criminal charges.

Assistant District Attorney Renee Steese urged bail be set at $100,000 owing to the seriousness of the charges. The offense mandates a five-year minimum state prison term if convicted.

She pointed out all three of the men are currently unemployed.

Morse ruled Rogers could not be held without additional information about his involvement in the crime. Roger's car was also confiscated by state police.

MacDonald said the case is still under investigation.

Students discuss world environs

By TOM CIAMPI
Collegian Correspondent

SOUTH HADLEY — In a conference that ended yesterday, 120 student delegates from northeastern colleges met at Mount Holyoke College to discuss the future of the world's environment.

The purpose of the conference, the 11th Annual Student Conference on International Affairs, was "to increase awareness of prevailing environmental conditions, to question our quality of life, and to offer some realistic solutions," according to Naomi Mobed, chairwoman of the conference and a MHC student.

Students attended workshops on such topics as air pollution, population control, management of water resources, and food and nutrition management, Mobed said.

Anna Quandt, an environmental policy coordinator for the Agency for International Development [AID] gave a keynote address Thursday night in which she asked students to "strongly consider careers in the ever-growing environmental management and development fields."

"There are a lot of different roles for you to play," she said.

Deborah Plunkett, one of four University of Massachusetts delegates, attended the workshop on food and nutrition management. She said she felt the conference addressed "vital issues for today and for the future."

"Our discussions and our conclusions will be sent to the World Bank," Plunkett said. The World Bank is a private organization that promotes economic development in the Third World. "The fact that they will be seen [by the World Bank] means we were at the conference for a reason."

Plunkett, a sophomore political science major, said the conference was announced last semester in political science classes. Students who wanted to be delegates were asked to talk with Peter Haas, professor of political science. Haas notified Plunkett and the other delegates in December.

UMass alumni visit, talk finances

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Ten state legislators, all University of Massachusetts alumni, visited last Wednesday and Thursday with UMass faculty, students and staff to better understand the University's financial plight.

Among other things the purpose of the visit, said Representative Stan Rosenberg, who coordinated the event, was to reintroduce the University to alumni legislators who have had no direct involvement here since graduation.

In this way, Rosenberg said, "the next time someone talks about 'Zoo-Mass'" he and his colleagues will be able to argue in favor of the University with first-hand information.

Rosenberg stressed the fact that their visit was an information-gathering mission only.

"It was not our intent to come to any specific decisions these past two days," he said, "The process of coming to a consensus will be the work of the coming weeks and months."

Stephen J. Karol, chairman of the transportation committee, said that UMass has trouble being recognized by state legislators because 90-percent are graduates of private colleges.

"I don't think that there is any hostility towards public higher education," he said, but, "You have to admit that most of the

Republican Club tangles with Spartacus League

By THOMAS RODRIGUES

and SCOTT HILL
Collegian Correspondent

A brawl between members of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club and a socialist organization broke out in the Campus Center Thursday night, police said.

The fight began shortly after 9 p.m. in C.C. room 903 after seven members of the Republican Club disrupted the meeting of the Spartacus League, a socialist organization, which planned to discuss anti-Ku Klux Klan/Skinhead rallies in Philadelphia and Atlanta.

The Republicans became too noisy for Spartacists during a video presentation showing unified, integrated resistance to the KKK/Skinhead march, and were asked to quiet down or leave.

Tom Daley, who ran the Spartacist meeting, tried to keep decorum during the discussion which followed the video, but was unable to maintain control. The Republicans repeatedly spoke out of turn, he said.

"The Republicans sought to verbally dominate the meeting," said Alan Ditmore who attended the meeting with members of the Radical Student Union. "We [the RSU] attended the meeting because we had heard rumors the Republicans might try to deny the Spartacist League the right to speak."

In a press release issued by the Republican Club, members said they felt compelled to attend the meeting because the two groups are fundamentally opposed to each other.

A wrestling match ensued when a Spartacist tried to physically eject Republican Doug Dratch from the room after he was asked to sit down several times and refused. Dratch resisted eviction.

Immediately, the other six Republican Club members jumped up and joined their colleague and the scuffle between the two groups began. Tom Daley said later one Republican brandished a chair and screamed, "I will kill you."

Police arrived 10 minutes later to quell the fight which had spilled out into the corridor.

The Republicans maintain they had been polite and peaceful until Daley started to lambast the Minuteman, the conservative publication on which most of the Republicans present had worked.

The Republican Club claims the Spartacists were brutalizing Dratch, which prompted the larger scuffle.

No serious injuries were reported, however, Scott Kramer of the Republican Club was treated at University Health Services after reportedly being headbutted on the nose.

Daley, who refers to the Republican Club as Nazi stormtroopers, had expected trouble from them because the two groups had confronted each other in the past. Anuj Bhogilal, an undergraduate senator who was present at the forum said, "I definitely think they [The Republican Club] came looking for trouble."

The Republican Club has stated that no fewer than four of its members will file criminal charges against the Spartacus League.

alumni

"The battle we have to fight is not only with our colleagues but with the public," he said.

Because of the legislator's visit, Legislator Marc R. Pacheco believes they will be more inclined to vote for measures favoring public higher education.

Kenneth M. Lemanski, assistant vice-chairman of the ways and means committee, said he learned just how hard it is to rebuild after the budget cuts have gutted an institution.

"The little bit that has been chipped away," he said, "will take far more to replace than was pulled out."

Lemanski hopes to do away with the problems caused by funding public higher education in one lump sum in the state budget by having each campus represented in next year's budget individually or by the school's designation as a university, state college or community college.

In this way, Lemanski hopes cutting higher education's budget will not be as easy or tempting as in the past.

Other legislators that attended the two-day retreat were Stephen M. Brewer, Christopher J. Hodgkins, David P. Magnani, Patrick Landers III, Paul D. Harold, and Thomas P. White.

porary setback is unknown, he doubts Amherst is suffering a water crisis.

"There's no fear the town is having a major water problem in terms of serving the University," he said.

Seven years ago the University was forced to close due to a similar water crisis, sending thousands of students home for several days, Wozniak said.

But, improvements in Physical Plant reaction time since the initial shutdown render a second occurence unlikely, he said.

"I wouldn't think this would happen again," Wozniak said. "We got to it as quickly as we're going to."

Although the water level has stabilized, Wozniak said he urges students to continue efforts to conserve water by completely turning off faucets and taking shorter showers.

Amherst College

"I'd like to see the fights stop but, I don't think this university as an institution is liable for the behavior of its students once they leave the campus," Duffey said.

Duffey said although anyone can file a lawsuit he didn't think any court would find the University liable and that a more effective determent would be to post trespassing signs on the Amherst campus.

"If those signs were posted it would enable them to have the snowballers arrested," Duffey said.

Amherst administrators hope to obtain a court injuction that would allow campus security and local police to arrest anyone found on the campus instigating a snow fight.

Duffey has publicly condemed the attacks on Amherst, which he calls "cowardly" but efforts to dissuade the UMass students from participating in the onslaught have failed.

Amherst College President Peter Pouncey has reportedly warned Duffey to end the "malicious occurrence" several times and is angered at the lack of response from UMass.

The College's security officials said if the next fight, if there is a next one, is violent,state troopers would be notified and asked to aid campus security.

Increase in area skinheads reported

BOSTON (AP) — Skinheads, a phalanx of tough-talking and sometimes violent teen-agers that has emerged in several US cities, are increasing their numbers in New England, the Boston Globe reported.

The philosophy of the youths varies widely. Some are angry young men who talk of a "Skinhead nation," modeled loosely on the Nazi regime. But about half of the skinheads vigorously oppose their racist brothers.

New England skinheads who do espouse the Nazi philosophy are usually milder than those in cities elsewhere in the country, where skinheads have been charged with a string of assaults, beatings and at least two murders.

Some New England skinheads boast of barroom brawls and violent streetfighting, but many have done little more than pass out leaflets and engage in ant-Semitic vandalism.

Rhode Island has at least two groups of skinheads who meet regularly on weekends in East Providence, while there are several dozen skinheads in Portland, Maine. In Boston, skinheads congregate in Harvard Square and Kenmore Square, but police say there have been no problems.

Shell Franklin, assistant director of the Connecticut regional office of the Anti-Defamation League, said several instances of Nazi skinhead graffiti have been reported recently in the New Haven area.

"We are concerned," he said. "We believe the movement will grow in general and in Connecticut."

Skinheads interviewed by the newspaper exhibited the differences in their philosophies.

Skinhead Jerzey Sharpe, 17, of Wakefield, R.I., has the words "White Pride," tattoed on his left arm. On his right arm there is a swastika and the motto, "Skinhead. Our Pride is Our Loyalty."

"White people are getting a raw deal," Sharpe said. "White people founded this country and they deserve to have it for their own."

But other skinheads, often called Ska skins, are interested mainly in the getup, black bomber jackets studded with insignia, rolled up jeans and steel-toed leather boots. They also are looking for ways to rebel.

"Mom was a 'head' from way back, a hippie," said Sean Tremblay, a Ska skin in Portland. "She doesn't think much of skins."

students, and receive no funding from the national organization. Only undergraduates may hold office, she said, but anyone in the community can join.

"We are for everyone, because equal rights benefits everyone," Gray said. "All people are welcome."

The group is already comprised of both men and women, Gray said, adding "we have a good balance between radicals and conservatives."

Gray and Callahan both said they are working on internships through the women's studies department to organize the new chapter. "I wanted to put full effort into it, so I made it an internship," Callahan said.

Gray said they are currently working with their own funds, but will be seeking private donations and collecting membership dues in the next few weeks.

Beginning this week, Callahnan said, there will be a table on the Campus Center concourse to provide information and register new members. There will be sliding scale membership fee from $20 to $35 annually, but, Gray said, "we don't want people to be left out because of money."

DELTA UPSILON: THE BETTER ALTERNATIVE

In case you did not know it, there is a better alternative to living in the dorms. What do you have? You have a room in the dorm. You have a few friends down the hall. You have lousy food in the Dinning Commons. You have terrible reception for your T.V. and stereo. You may not have anyone to study with. You have a limited social life, to say the least. You may not know enough people to make a team, so you do not participate in intramurals. You can not make a difference in area governments. It is impossible, the University is too big.

What could you have if you join Delta Upsilon Fraternity? You become a part of a house, of a brotherhood. You move into a home with 30 best friends. You eat catered meals made with fresh foods by our professional chef. You get a social life that does not quit, but when it does slow down, there is always cable T.V. You would be joining a house that is currently in first place for the campus wide intramurals championship, and the coveted Olympus Cup. We are campus champions in tennis, swimming, and cross country, and the Greek Area champions in football and soccer.

The best thing is that your grades do not have to suffer while you enjoy the good life here. As a house, we have the fourth highest GPA in the Greek Area, well above the all mens average. Our older brothers act as informal tutors and advisors to the younger brothers. In addition, academic files are available in the house to help you get ahead. Our alumni offer special internships and co-ops for an added advantage in the game of life. From turf management to sports management, from political science and economics to theater and math, and from engineering to food marketing, we have brothers in all majors. You can not lose, so come by and see for yourself the better alternative to dorm life!

If you have any questions feel free to call us, or drop by the house (we are four houses away from the grad tower). Our number is 549-3831, ask for Paul or Brad. See you at rush!

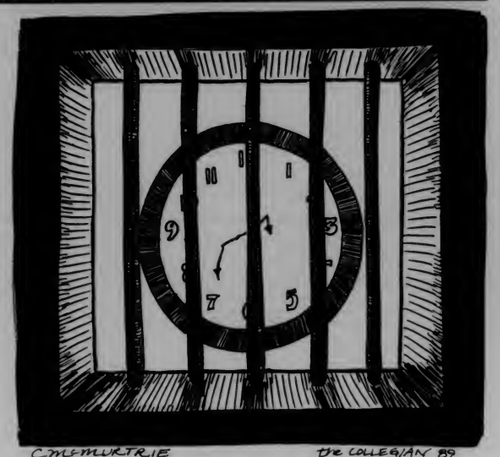
A maximum security reunion behind locked iron doors



C.MCMURTRIE DC COLLEGIAN '89

BALTIMORE — It looks like a factory, but the smoke stacks are replaced with a seemingly sky-scraping barbed wire fence, its lonely gate hosted by a collection of burly armed guards. There is no sign adorning the vast brick cage indicating who owns this place or what purpose it serves. All the residents know it is the Baltimore City maximum security prison.

Alise Harfield

I enter the first gate with escorts and proceed to the second. The winding walkway makes me feel like an experimental mouse whose job it is to find a slice of cheese as fast as I can at the end of this maze of cement. Instead, I find nothing but fences less than a foot away from my right and left that occasionally grazes my coat as it takes nearly five minutes to lead me inside. I am met by another guard who searches me; then, once satisfied, issues me a green guest card and tells me to wait at the next door.

I am still on the outside, having been searched in a booth beside the iron door at which I am waiting with two others. It is only when five of us accumulate that a reverberating buzz is heard, two huge men hoist the dead bolt, and drag the door across the black tile floor to reveal an audience. It closes with a definitive thud, sweeping up a stench I've never before experienced — as if the walls have, for years, contained each bodily odor, worry, and anticipation of every visitor of this place.

The four others walk in ahead of me, check in with a guard, and deposit their belongings, save for big brown Stop & Shop bags loaded with food, clothing and mail which they put into lockers by the door. Then they take their seats amongst dozens of others who are reading magazines, chewing gum, breathing. I sit up front, apart from those who are here to see someone they know. I am here to observe.

From the lockers I can't help but notice a room whose walls are entirely glass. Tables the length of the room are nailed to the floor, and seem suspended by the intertwined iron bars that are attached to their surfaces. People inside push certain contents of their Stop & Shop bags through an opening the size and shape of a mouse hole. A guard and his gun watch each transaction.

I peruse the room for a familiar sight to comfort me; I feel very out of place dressed in a skirt and heels. I see a clock much like the ones at the University of Massachusetts — black with a white face and red minute hand. I stare at it so I don't have to look at the waiters. It is a good minute before I realize the red line is not moving; the clock's time is stuck at 8:10. A sign looms above it: Talking: Low Tones Only.

A baby cries. I am startled. I stare at the woman whose pink terry-clothed infant clutches at her breast, only causing the paper bag to crinkle louder. Why else would a baby be in a prison? After a long wait, a bearded man and guard emerge ceremoniously, silencing the audience. Now it is someone else's turn. I wonder if the woman will take her baby inside that room.

A name is called. A boy of 11, maybe 12, rises from the last row, walks to the guard, and hands over his card. He waves to one of the prisoners. The door slams just after he says, "Hi, dad."

Shuttling off to search for cleaner planets

I was strolling through the Campus Center concourse last week when I noticed a vendor's table which I had never seen before. A stocky-looking man in a business suit caught my attention as I walked by it.

Bob Bobala

"Hey buddy," he said, "care to make a donation to Operation Lift-off?"

"Pardon me?"

"I'm soliciting donations for an organization called Operation Lift-off. It's an environmental movement."

"Oh, you mean something like MassPIRG?"

"Ah, not exactly. This is really a movement."

"How do you mean?"

The man stood up straight and loosened his tie. "Well, the way my people look at it, the Earth, our home, is an endangered planet. Therefore, our only solution is to move."

"Run that by me again?"

"Look, the Earth is not the place it used to be. Don't you read the papers? . . . Haven't you heard of the greenhouse effect? The globe is steadily warming as a result of the buildup of carbon dioxide and other gasses in the atmosphere. If this extra carbon dioxide continues to warm the atmosphere, radical changes in climate could occur — just like the ones that wiped out the dinosaurs. . . . Now, do you know where the majority of this carbon dioxide comes from?"

"Uh, the burning of fossil fuels?"

"Right. Coal, oil. Do you think the world is going to stop driving cars in an effort to save the environment?"

"Well, I-"

"It doesn't matter, because if the greenhouse effect doesn't get us, something else will. . . . Thanks to our use of chlorofluorocarbons, the ozone layer is depleting. Pretty soon we won't be able to go out into the sunlight without being sure that we'll get skin cancer, cataracts, and a weakened immune system.

"But forget about this atmospheric stuff. We've got enough problems right on the land. Did you know that man is destroying the Earth's tropical forests — which are the home of half of the Earth's plant and animal life — at a rate equal to one football field a second? Yes. One football-field's worth every second!

"Not to mention garbage, raw sewage, and medical wastes that have washed up onto beeches in the United States, the Mediterranean, North Sea, and English Channel. Plus, gross amounts of toxic waste and radioactive contamination near public wells will soon lead to massive shortages of drinking water. Am I making myself clear?"

"You're right. Something must be done!"

"Yes! We must move! We must leave the planet! That is the goal of Operation Lift-off. Presently we are conducting research which we hope will produce several deep space shuttles that will allow thousands to leave the planet and search for a more suitable world. Could you spare five dollars for such a worthy cause?"

"Wait a minute. Thousands of people? But there are billions of us."

"Well, of course, tickets for these deep space shuttles will be quite expensive. This is not a cheap project. Only the wealthiest will be able to afford it."

"Then what do you want five bucks from me for? Why don't you go talk to Donald Trump?"

"Well, first of all, Mr. Trump has already made a substantial donation. But, we will be holding a lottery to give away several seats on various shuttles which, with your donation, you will be eligible for."

"No thanks man, I think I'd rather stick it out in the greenhouse for as long as I can and then sweat to death."

It's not who wins or loses, it's who scores after the game

When we were kids, we all dreamed about what we wanted to be when we grew up. After years of thought and various discarded potential occupations, I have chosen the path which I would like to travel. As a friend of mine once told me, "Being a sportswriter is the ultimate life.

Jim Clark

Imagine doing nothing but watching games and getting paid for it."

Ahh, yes, the ultimate life. In an ideal world where there is a distinct line between being a foreign correspondent in Beirut and being a frequenter on press row at Boston Garden, the trials and tribulations of being a sportswriter are few are far between.

But alas, life is never ideal. And sports these days seem to be a reflection of that. No longer must the sportswriter be responsible for just the facts of the game. No, the sports pages have quickly become a sort of branch office for the National Enquirer. It takes some digging nowadays to get the stories of real interest.

It is for this reason that the sportswriter must be prepared. There are no longer scruples in this business. When one makes the trek to the locker room, he/she must be prepared to throw away all morals and get right down to the serious stuff. No more petty questioning allowed.

The eager sports reporter journeys to the bowels of Fenway Park, often disregarding what has just happened up above on the playing surface. The games are now just a sideshow; personal matters are what the business is now all about.

Entering the clubhouse, the writer waits amidst the hordes, many of whom are on a similar ongoing search for the truth. The Bill of Rights serves the public with their "right to know," and they want to know everything. Even the smallest, slimiest details.

Being a good journalist, he feels obliged to carry out this request. A few players mill about, but the main characters in each soap opera-like plot can be seen cowering in the safety of the shower or trainer's room, hopeful that the buzzards will retreat. They should know better. Today's media mongers are persistent as ever, often directed by higher-ups to get the story, at any cost.

Finally, the subject in question will enter stage left, draped in merely a towel or robe. No time for dressing — deadline pressure demands that this whole process be done as swiftly as possible. The athlete stares out at this sea of scavengers, a virtual wall of Geraldo clones. Ultimately, the barrage hits.

Mr. Boggs, why did you take pictures of your teammates in bed with other women?

"I'd rather not answer that question. Ask me about the game."

OK, why did you boot that grounder in the fourth inning?

"I'd rather not answer that."

Such dodging of questions is typical for many athletes. Some players, usually the less popular ones, are just fine around the media. Others have strange reactions. They won't talk, or they'll intimidate, often going over the edge to actual physical abuse. They've been known to rip shirts off of writers, pour Gatorade over their heads, shove them in garbage barrels, send live rats to female writers, and now promise to "hurt" anyone who dares talk about his family.

The detractors will point fingers, saying that the invasive methods of the sportswriters have caused this rift between the two sets. But clearly most scribes would be more than satisfied to revert to the days when what occurred on the field, court or ice was all that mattered. Days when drugs, scandal and controversy were restricted to the back alleys.

It is different now. Sports writing is not as fun as it was before. It is no longer the ultimate life.

Episcopalians consecrate first woman bishop

BOSTON (AP) — The barriers of two milleniums of an all-male hierarchy have been broken, and to the women who paved the way for Barbara Harris to become an Episcopal bishop, her elevation seems like a miracle.

"I feel very, very happy. In my life, I can see the first woman bishop," said the Rev. Florence Tim-Oi Li, 81, the first clergywoman in the worldwide Anglican communion. "It made me hopeful. Things are realized now."

Ms. Li stopped functioning as a priest in 1946 in response to pressure from Anglican bishops outside of China, where she was ordained in 1944, but on Saturday she and other pioneer clergywomen helped consecrate Harris.

The ceremony made Harris the first woman bishop in a church that believes in apostolic succession — that the church leadership can be traced to the apostles.

"I think it's really helped a lot of us see how history is made," said the Rev. I. Carter Heyward, one of 11 women "illegally" ordained in a service in Philadelphia in 1974 that paved the way for the Episcopal Church's approval of women clergy two years later. "My experience in the Episcopal Church is that it really does take some pushing, and I doubt that that's over."

While nearly all of the more than 8,000 people who packed the convention center shouted their approval, others fought right up to the end to preserve the tradition, dating back to Jesus Christ, of all-male bishops.

At the point in the ceremony when objections were called for, John Jamieson, representing a group of conservative Episcoplaians called the Prayer Book Society, said her "pretended consecration" holds church laws "in contempt."

HERE'S ONE COLLEGE MEMORY WE'LL HELP YOU FORGET.

If you're like a lot of people, your longest-lasting memory of college is the student loan you're still paying back. The Army has a solution, though: qualify, sign up with us, and we'll sign off on your loan.

Each year you serve as a soldier, the Army will reduce your college debt by 1/3 or $1,500, whichever amount is greater. So after serving just 3 years, your government loan could be completely paid off.

You're eligible for this program if you have a National Direct Student Loan, or a Guaranteed Student Loan, or a Federally Insured Student Loan made after October 1, 1975. The loan must not be in default.

Lecturer discusses life of Frederick Douglass

By Paulette Person
Collegian Correspondent

Last Thursday Feb. 9th approximately 80 people gathered at Amherst College to hear a lecture presented by William S. Mcfeely entitled Frederick Douglass & 19th-Century America.

The lecturer reflected on the memory of slaves in American literature through readings of Frederick Douglass' book My Bondage and my Freedom.

The lecture discussed many personal life accounts of Douglass, whose real name is Frederick Augustus Bailey and explained in detail the ordeal that Douglass endured in participating in the Anti-salvery crusade that occurred in Britain during the 1840's.

Douglass was a staunch advocate of civil rights and a noted author of several works. He was also the publisher of the North Star, one of the first Black newspapers in America.

Noted Historian and a Pulitzer Prize winner, William S. McFeely is a Professor of American History at the University of Georgia. This was the first in a series of six lectures to be held at Amherst College over the next eight weeks, concerning the life of Frederick Douglass.

■ New Africa House takeover

Duffey cited an increased effort to recruit minority students and a continued effort to support and promote multi-cultural education on campus as ways the administration has worked to improve the University.

Some students, however, feel that the campus atmosphere has returned to a state of apathy.

"Nothing has changed for the better, the situation could happen again," said Joe Paige, a junior and participant in the takeover. That point was reiterated by takeover particpant Scott Thompson, who said, "The reason for the occupation was never fully realized — even now."

Associate Dean of students Rick Townes said he believes the threat of reoccurrence is real: "I hope that people are still listening. People need to be heard. After the Yvette Henry case people listened — then forgot," he said.

Yvette Henry was a black student who in 1983 was accused of arson during a barrage of fires in campus residential halls. The University later dropped charges against Henry because of insufficient evidence, but not before she was suspended from school and dismissed from her job as a resident assistant.

Exhibit at gallery

By JOSEPH L HILL Jr.
Collegian Staff

On exhibit at the August Savage Gallery, located in New Africa House, is a photo exhibit entitled The Civil Rights Movement in Retrospect.

The exhibit is a collection of photographs taken during the Civil Rights Movement. The photos range from the historic Brown vs. Board of Education supreme court decision, to the recent visit of Minister Louis Farrakhan to Umass.

The photo display is the brainchild of Richard A. Ducree, a junior Architectural Studies major. According to Ducree, the exhibit was initially a collaboration with Inez Boyd-Wilkins. "We came up with the idea,"said Ducree. But other activities delayed them from pursuing the exhibit further. One year later, Ducree submitted a proposal to the Umass Arts Council, and the rest is [excuse the pun] history.

Most of the photos on exhibit are from the well-known Civil Rights photographer Lawrence Henry. Henry's sister, Christine Lindsey gave Ducree permission to use the photos in the exhibit.

The exhibit was sponsored by the Umass Arts Council and the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs special activities support fund.

A lecture series with various Professors from the Afro-American Department, who were involved in the Civil Rights Movement is planned for early March, as a follow up to the exhibit.

History of blacks in British society

Editors Note: The following is the first in a series of articles to provide a historical analysis of blacks in Britain and their relationship to blacks in America.

STEPHEN SMALL
Collegian Correspondent

When American students think of Britain the most frequent images that come to mind are of a society steeped in centuries of tradition, castles and cathedrals, architecture and other artifacts of so-called high culture. Another set of images that come to mind is dramatically different. The rock music of Pink Floyd, the inane humor of Benny Hill, or the profound and irreverent comedy of Monty Python.

But an image which infrequently comes out is that of black people. Like Ralph Ellison's "Invisible Man," blacks in England seldom catch attention, except in the most obvious and stereotypical scenes. In sport, think of multiple world title holder decathalete Daly Thompson, or the British heavyweight boxer, Frank Bruno, who takes on Mike Tyson this month for the world title; in music, the soul and funk of androgynous group Imagination, the soft sounds of sultry Sade, the mid-tempo beat of Loose Ends, and the unsurpassed jazz of Courtney Pine. In Reggae, the phenomenal success of Steel Pulse, of Aswad and of the multi-racial group, UB40.

While real, such images are too narrow a portrayal of the variety and vitality of Black life; or the range and diversity of our contribution to society and the human experience. Nor do they fully convey the struggles and strivings which have so long been a part of our endeavors to survive.

American students are used to thinking of the United States as a society plagued by minority race relations problems, as minority groups live an uneasy life in their quest for the American Dream.

They seldom had reason to visualize England in that way except for a short time in 1981, and again in 1985, when widespread rioting (so-called "race riots") rocked these popular perceptions. But this soon passed. The image of Britain still prevails in the minds of most students as one of civil calm.

The old saying "What about the half that has never been told" has a ring here! The simple fact is that blacks in Britain have had a long and illustrious history, dating back to the 1550's when first brought to slave ports as the British Empire began its ascendancy In fact there are earlier records of black soldiers in the armies of the conquering Romans long before the Battle of Hastings.

Blacks contributed greatly to the building of the British Empire and of Britain itself.

You do not have to agree entirely with historian Eric Williams that the industrial revolution resulted from the labor and productivity of Africans to recognize the contributions of Black slave labor. Blacks lived in England in minuscule numbers until the 1950's when, in response to a demand for labor, they arrived at Her Majesty's shores. Up until that time "race" to the English had largely been a foreign affair. Since that time it has very largely become a home affair - the return of the native.

This series of articles will explore the black presence in England and examine the circumstances and experiences of our counterparts over there. It will also examining how blacks came to arrive in that country, what positions they occupy and how they have tried to fulfill their aspirations. Politics and policing; reggae and Rastafarians; riots and ransacking; black women; black resistance; and black youth, will also be discussed in this series of articles. Many examples of the magnitude of our ordeals and of the fortitude of our brothers and sisters will be found.

> "February is the month to renew our study of black History. This month, instead of just looking back in time, we'll look back across the Atlantic."

In our reflections, much testimony perseverance and resilience will be found. Afro-American will be surprised at how far the facts conflict with the popular conceptions outlined above. They will also be intrigued by the similarities between the two countries. Though they exhibit major contrasts in their histories, and in their political and social organization, England and America reveal amazing similarities in the experiences of their minority populations. From slavery as a social institution, legal discrimination and hostility; from exclusion and injustice; to recrimination, reforms and resentment. Both nations have struggled to extent the rights bestowed on the majority to their minority populations and both have faced constant and unrelenting demands for justice. The American dilemma has become a British dilemma. The sad but simple fact is the blacks in both societies are at the bottom by any of the accepted social indicators — wealth, income, poverty, employment, or health. This alone suggests that both countries have much in common.

And even greater will be the surprise at how much Afro-Americans see a reflection of themselves in blacks in England. Without always being aware of it, blacks here have exercised a remarkable influence on the culture, lifestyles and political ideologies of blacks in England. In its politics, struggles and resistance; in its music, art and other popular culture; art and other popular culture; and in a whole host of other ways, black America is reiterated and relived through the lives of black Britons.

A notable fact about the black experience in America is that Afro-Americans have always looked abroad for inspiration and insights, fortification and fulfillment, for perspectives and frameworks, and just to give meaning to their lives. And during these times key advances were always made. Think of the Back-to-Africa movements of Martin Delany and Bishop McNeal Turner; the tips to Europe to Frederick Douglass or Booker T. Washington; the founding of the Pan-African Movement by the W. E. B. Dubois in England in the 1890's; the Universal Negro Improvement Association of Marcus Garvey; right up to visits by Malcolm X, Martin Luther King and Jessie Jackson. In this past month Jessie Jackson visited five African nations seeking greater contact, communication and cooperation among African - Americans in the diaspora. As the pillar of the British Empire, England has always been a port of call. Even Minister Louis Farrakhan tried to spread the message there but was denied entry.

A notable fact about the black experience in Britian is that they too have continually looked beyond their shores for the same insights and inspirations. And America has consistently figured prominently in that vision. In the past black looked to African and African-American spokespersons and activists for comfort, support and ideas. This influence endures today.

Blacks today will learn greatly by reflecting on the experiences of their African sisters and brothers on other continents. Not only will it liberate their minds form the blinkered perspectives, limited assumptions and narrow visions of a single society. But it will open up their eyes to a whole new world of vision, through which they can view their futures. As Marcus Garvey and Malcolm X said, and as Minister Louis Farrakhan recently reiterated, Blacks in the United States may be a minority, but people of color across the world are a majority. And as Mayor Andrew Young pointed out in his recent visit to UMass, whatever our nationality or ethnicity, we cannot afford to remain "culturally retarded" in a society and world with such diverse cultures. Reflection will help you understand, interpret and act upon your own situation.

When the distinguished Guyanese scholar and political activist Walter Rodney wrote his classic "The Grounding with my Brothers," his intention was to advocate a constant exchange of views, perspectives and support between everyone in the Black community. Not just in one country but across continents and oceans, where ever we are found in the diaspora. Swept away by the political powers of the time as with so many of our spokesperson his memory lives on, recreated and revitalized in our strivings for freedom. We must extend our horizons, expand our intellects as we express our humanity and affirm our dignity. We must seek knowledge about the struggles abroad, learn from others and lend support.

Next week we begin with a profile and overview of the black presence in Britian today.

The author is a member of the Sociology Department. He teaches courses on comparative class and racial inequality.

Zombik

artists. "Barbara Streisand started it all off - that woman was my goddess! Then it turned into Billie Holiday, Bonnie Raitt, and now Bessie Smith."

Being at UMass has brought pleasures and problems. "When I first came to campus, I wasn't so conscious of the racial tension. Then I met a black guy - I had a crush on him - and we had breakfast sometimes. He'd say things like 'My, you look very white this morning', and he didn't mean it as a compliment. But it was true, I didn't know as much about black culture as he did."

Now Zombik is thinking of changing her Fine Arts major to a BDIC degree, working within the Afro-American Studies concentration in music, dance, and theater.

"For the future", says Zombik, "I'd like to find a jazz pianist and do a little circuit. I'd love to teach when I get older - after 45. Until then I want to experience! I want to do, I want to crank! At some point I'd love to create a theater ensemble that does musical productions. My immediate goal is to do well in school, because I've finally found courses that I'm completely passionate about. Passion is an essential, beautiful thing!"

For Kim Zombik, academic work and creative expression channel passion and enthusiasm into high achievement. The UMass community can undoubtedly expect more accomplishments from her in the future.

Hubbard's humanism offers new utopia

A Glimpse of Paradise, a slide presentation by local artist Libby Hubbard, is intended to give a sense of optimism and a vision of hope in the midst of the prevailing political mood of pessimism and despair. Hubbard has researched the subject of utopian thought and studied the cultural forms it has fostered through the centuries to create a slide show which is both informative and imaginitive.

The show begins with references to the history of utopias from Eden to New Eden. Hubbard has selected images from the rich tradition of utopian art and architecture to produce a portrait of utopia which is as yet unfinished. Visually and narratively, Hubbard attempts to show that the prospect of a new utopia is not an abstract idea requiring a leap of faith, but a real option for the future, already anticipated by current technological progress and alternative living systems. Such alternatives are addressed as the presentation closes with slides depicting space colonization, archaeology, new architecture, energy sources and other humanistic technology. So go and take A Glimpse of Paradise this Thursday at the Bangs Community Center (downstairs). Show begins 7 p.m.

Radiators losing steam as Phish surface in Student Union

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Who would have thought four kids from Vermont just looking to have a little fun with their music could outshine headlining bigshots from New Orleans?

That's exactly what happened Friday night when the Radiators closed the show for Phish in the Student Union Ballroom. The Burlington band, who earned one-tenth what the veterans got, kept the crowd equally content.

The Radiators' added slick keyboarding to a familiar southern guitar sound to produce what they call "Fish Music." Songs like "Love Is A Tango" and their cover of the Stones' "Let it Bleed" were all-out pop fiestas. But haven't we had enough of those?

The uniformity of rhythms quickly grew tiresome, and while this can be a comforting way for us to recognize our own down-home Americana, we expect something a little more thought-provoking from musicians who aim for the student market. Too much sound with too little thought behind it.

But let's move on — or move back, rather — to Phish. These boys played like they meant it. Their tunes are a stringing together of seemingly unrelated material: the opening number, "Golgi Apparatus" and "You Enjoy Myself" were complex crossings of crescendoing and decrescendoing melodies. The latter featured a memorable solo by the alarmingly adept Trey Anastasio, then moved into a reverberating a capella round which blended into a blaring muddle of sound and ended.

For the witty "David Bowie," whose only lyrics are the title, keyboards leavened the blues guitar/bass combination to form a jazz-fusion sound that dispelled any of those tiresome Grateful Dead associations. "The Lizards" was a latin-flavored parable unified by a sputtering hi-hat; the band managed to stay unified through all its eclectic movements.

Each song in Phish's set came to life as they would take a fairly uncharacteristic tune, slap it around, soften it and mold it into a web of sound. This was a 10-minute process which always climaxed with an abrupt stop, a radical rhythm change or some other surprise. Phish could be the first band to earn its renown for the way they end a tune. The rhythm and blues of "Possum" began with the gallop of Clapton's "Lay Down Sally" and moved into an instrumental free-for-all.

The freshness that is so characteristic of young bands is directly proportional to the amount of effort they put into their sound. As their reputations increase, they frequently grow stale and just pump out tunes using a foolproof pop formula. Friday night, we saw a direct confrontation between these two stages in the life of a band.

Multi-talented Zombik hopes to expand creative horizons

By SISTER WASSI
Special to the Collegian

How many 22 year-old women do you do you know who can sing, dance, act, and carry sixteen credits? Sophomore, Kim Zombik fits the bill. Currently a Fine Arts major, Kim has been getting rave reviews in the local press for performances with favorite local reggae band, New Horizon. She has recently become a frequent guest at Iron Horse open mike nights, singing blues ballads a capella.

Zombik grew up in Boston's Jamaica Plain, daughter of a Polish mother and black American father. She taped her first recording when she was nine years old - singing "Evergreen" at a girlfriend's slumber party. In her teen years, she performed with the Neighboorhood Children's Theater.

At UMass, Zombik broke onto the music scene by singing for coffee house nights at Sylvan complex and the Hatch. Last Spring she joined a Hampshire College production of "Hair", and travelled with the rest of the cast to New York City, to give a concert at the United Nations in benefit of children with AIDS. Recently, she was invited by St. Kittsian drummer, Mentos to sit in with the popular New Horizon reggae band.

Kim has a pleasing voice and smooth, confident delivery. At a recent set with New Horizon at Pearl Street, her voice was so engrossing, the spellbound audience stopped dancing to listen!

Singing, says Zombik, is "a complete way to vent a lot of emotion. When you sing, you put all of yourself into everything that you're saying, and that's what drew me into it. It's great, feeling my voice come out doing the things I'd like it to do - the whole glory of feeling something expressive come out."

Zombik lists a diverse array of favorite

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By Jeanne Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get a jump on the competition by making long-distance calls. Telemarketing helps you reduce travel and boost profit margins. A relationship takes a dramatic turn today. Listen to your heart.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You feel upbeat and head for work or a meeting in a positive mood. People listen more carefully to what you say now. Focus on an anniversary or special event.

GEMINI (May 21-June20): The future of a relationship may be out of your hands. Cooperation is the key to success both at home and in business. You make the right impression on someone you meet at lunch.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If your apartment house goes condo, you could get a bargain. Long hours will take a toll on your productivity unless you find a way to sneak in a catnap. A relationship matures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Postpone travel and center your activities around home base. Mastering a computer will speed up tedious work and give you more freedom. You can be the life of the party this evening. Explore new relationships.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You feel more content now. Improvements in your work environment put you in a better mood. Keep careful track of credit card expenditures. This is not the time to exceed your limit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your writing and speaking skills are assets you can use to improve an employment or financial situation. Help a client's business expand and profits will rise. You know exactly what is needed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Those who spent most of the weekend outdoors return to work refreshed and happy. Concentrate on tying up the loose ends of a project so you can keep costs within budget.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Although you can win an argument, it will be a hollow victory if you offend higher-ups. Look for a more diplomatic way to get your point across. Travel is favored; control costs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stock market and real estate dealings can improve your cash reserves. Good times are coming. Although you still have to work hard, new business associations provide some relief. Count your blessings!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone is headed back into your life. You have a chance to make a good relationship even better. Your imaginative ideas will mean nothing until you present them to those in authority.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Deal with a joint financial matter before you lose the clout you enjoy. You will have to do a bit of backstage maneuvering to win. An affectionate relationship grows warmer today.

Stockton, Malone jazz up a win for West, 143-134

HOUSTON (AP) — Playing without the real Magic, Karl Malone and John Stockton created some magic of their own yesterday, carrying the West to a 143-134 victory over the East in the NBA All-Star Game.

Stockton, the only point guard on the West team after scheduled starter Magic Johnson was injured on Wednesday night, directed a record-breaking attack in the first half, wowing a record All-Star crowd at the Astrodome.

The West led by as many as 31 points en route to an 87-59 halftime lead, breaking by one the All-Star record for points in a half set by the West in 1962. The East got as close as seven in the fourth quarter before faltering.

Stockton had an All-Star record nine assists in the first quarter, breaking Johnson's 1984 record of eight, although he didn't play the last 3:18.

Malone, Stockton's Utah Jazz teammate, scored 18 of his 28 points in the first half and was 8-for-9 from the field in the first two periods, most of them on dunks or feathery layups. Malone was selected the game's Most Valuable Player.

Dale Ellis scored 27 points and Alex English 16 for the West. Stockton finished with 11 points and 17 assists.

Michael Jordan scored 12 of his 28 points in the fourth quarter to lead the East, which still leads the All-Star series 25-14. The East had won seven of the previous nine games. Isiah Thomas added 19 points and 14 assists for the East.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, in his 20th and last season, appeared in his 18th All-Star Game, missing his first five shots and scoring four points. He set the career All-Star scoring record last year.

The attendance of 44,735 broke the All-Star record of 43,146 at the Indianapolis Hoosier Dome in 1985. It was the largest NBA crowd ever away from the Pontiac Silverdome, which has the four largest ever.

The West broke away from a 12-12 tie by outscoring the East 35-19 in the last 8:14 of the first period.

The spurt started with a 13-2 run during which Malone scored six consecutive points and Ellis five.

With Stockton out, the West offense hardly slowed down. Chris Mullin, a 6-foot-7 forward, took over at point guard, but got help bringing the ball upcourt from 6-10 Tom Chambers, who scored 12 points in 5:14, helping the West increase its margin to 57-33 with 8:44 left in the first half.

men's swimming

200-yard individual medley soon after.

Minuteman diver Dan Chesnicka struggled, hitting his heel on the board on one dive, and ended up with a pair of second place finishes in the one- and three-meter competitions.

UMass got third, fourth and fifth in the 200-yard butterfly from Kennedy, Evan Gwilliam and Rutherford. The Minutemen took second, third and fourth in the 100-yard free and the 200-yard backstroke, with McIver nabbing second in the 100 and Ehle taking the 200.

In the 500-yard freestyle, another event in which Robertson usually swims, UMass' back was broken. The Terriers swept all three positions and only two swimming events were left. In those, John 'Chico' Gardiner got third in the 200-yard backstroke and the team of Ladd, Kennedy, Reich and McIver took second in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

Despite the beating the Minutemen took, there were many bright spots. Yarworth was pleased with the efforts of Gardiner, Reich and Yunker, among others. He also liked the fact that B.U. felt it had to shave to beat them, which he felt showed a lot of respect for his team.

The UMass swimmers didn't let the loss get them down either.

"They had a good practice [yesterday]," Yarworth said. "We will peak at the New Englands [and] beat B.U. at the Easterns."

Robertson swam at the practice and looks to be healthy by the championships, and with him back in the lineup UMass should not repeat a performance like the one at Boston University on Saturday.

Men's gymnastics rolls over MIT

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — About the most intense competition that the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team seen on Saturday was the one-on-one basketball game between Cal Booker and Bart Balocki before the meet.

But then there was the gymnastics meet that started at 1 p.m. with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The Minutemen, without Balocki and Booker, trounced the Engineers in their own gym 243.8-193.4.

It could have been worse than the 50-point blowout that it was if UMass coach Roy Johnson had sent his entire starting lineup. But Johnson elected to give about half of his starters the day off.

One starter that Johnson did not give the day off to was senior Jay Ronayne. Ronayne has been hampered by a foot injury for the past couple of weeks and has missed the last two meets. Johnson felt that this would be a good meet to get him into shape and thus entered him into two events, the still rings and the high bar.

Ronayne had problems on the high bar but surprised everyone with his performance on the still rings where he scored an 8.35.

"I didn't feel very good because I can't do any real dismounts and I can't do two of my good events, floor exercise and vaulting," Ronayne said. "Vaulting is my best event but unfortunately I can't do it anymore."

"He surprised us on the rings," UMass assistant coach Steve Clancy, who was sitting in for Johnson who went to the women's gymnastics meet in New Hampshire. "This is his first meet on rings this year. That was a real nice score to see."

Senior co-captain John Eggers won the rings with a 9.5. That score will help Eggers a lot in his bid to qualify for the NCAA Championships.

"We were just trying to concentrate on hitting our routines, getting consistent for Temple," Eggers said. "This is our last chance to get away scores to get qualified for nationals."

UMass, not surprisingly, swept every event. Eggers also won the floor exercise (9) the horizontal bar (9.05), the parallel bars (8.45), and the pommel horse (8.05) on the way to a 52.9 in the all-around to top all scorers.

The only event where Eggers did not take a first was the vault where sophomore Dave Dinucci took a little of the glory for himself, winning the event with an 8.7.

Senior Greg McCall got the call from Johnson for the first time this year but unfortunately it was at an inopportune time.

"I felt very weak," McCall said. "I was sick all this week. But it's a starting point. I'm not even close to the performance that I had last year."

The win upped the Minutemen to 4-2 on the season, 2-1 in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League, speaking of which Temple, an EIGL opponent will be coming to town for the Minutemen's first home meet of the year next weekend.

"One of the things we were doing was giving some of the guys a rest," Clancy said. "But another thing we wanted to do was look for consistency for some of the guys because Temple is coming up next week and that's a big meet."

Much bigger than Saturday's non-league meet with MIT was.

Women's gymnastics loses first

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The story of Saturday's meet at the University of New Hamphsire was not that the the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team suffered its first loss of the winter. In tallying 178.25 points to the Wildcat's 180.7, the Minutewomen (4-1) bested the previous all-time school scoring mark of 177.9.

"I see it as winning in losing," said coach Alfie Mitchell. "I'm proud of what we did, and with a few minor breaks, we could easily have done better."

UMass had brushed up against the record previously this season, coming within a mere tenth of a point at Cornell a couple of weeks back. A small adjustment in the balance beam lineup on Saturday made the difference, however, as Erika Baxter re-emerged as the team leading scorer with a 9.4 in the event and a 36.85 overall.

Baxter — who has slumped in recent weeks after a fast early season start — was the meet's top scorer, as her 36.85 added more that a point to her results in the last three meets. "She almost skipped over 36 and went right to 37," said Mitchell. Erin Klier and Kim Grady tied for fourth place all around with identical 35.25's.

Behind Baxter's high score, UMass captured the balance beam 44.9 to 44.3. The beam win was especially satisfying for Mitchell and Co. as it was the last event of the day, forcing UMass to overtake the scoring record under serious pressure. "Everyone was psyched," described Mitchell, "we knew by the last person that we had it."

The traditionally powerful Wildcats were led by Suzie Quinlan's 36.25 (second all-around) and Lori Brady's 36.20 (third) in capturing the vault, uneven bars and floor exercise.

"We wanted to win," said Mitchell, "but we weren't expected to. We wanted to go up there and get a good score and we did it."

Women's hoop stopped by GW

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts women's basketball coach Kathy Hewelt was hoping that this weekend's trip south would produce some positive results for the team.

It didn't.

The Minutewomen embarked on a two-game journey against Atlantic 10 conference rivals Temple and George Washington. In both cases, UMass was looking to make up for earlier losses suffered at Curry Hicks Cage.

After losing to Temple on Thursday, UMass traveled to the nation's capital, looking for a split at best on the trip. However, the Colonial Women of GW weren't accomodating to their guests, coming away with a 71-52 win over the Minutewomen.

The loss dropped UM to 9-11 overall and 4-8 in the conference. GW is now 7-13 overall.

Despite the fact that the games were on the road, Hewelt felt that her team is much better now than earlier this year and could turn in better performances this time around. That theory didn't work against Temple, as the Minutemen stumbled to a 67-46 loss. And Saturday's loss proved once again that UMass has to play better to establish itself among the top teams in the conference.

UMass has yet to beat a team that sits above it in the conference standings. The Minutewomen are seventh in

Men's swimming falls to Boston University

Robertson's absence hurts UM's cause

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

In the words of University of Massachusetts men's swimming coach Russ Yarworth, what was administered Saturday by Boston University upon the Minutemen could only be described as "a good old-fashioned butt whipping."

A psyched and shaved Terrier team thumped a UMass squad which was swimming without one of its top freestylers and cruised to a 147-96 win in Boston.

"They were the better team [Saturday]," said Yarworth. "They were really up for the meet."

The problems started early for the Minutemen as they only managed second and third in the 400-yard medley relay, an event they usually win. Dave Ehle, Pete Koback, Sean Rutherford and Pete Reich made up the top team for UMass.

In the 1000-yard freestyle, one of the events which ill swimmer Jim Robertson usually won, the Minutemen struggled to a third place finish. Frank Sampson, who was forced into the lead 1000 spot, swam well but just could not keep up with the pumped-up Terrier swimmers.

Brian McIver and Mike Yunker took second and third respectively in the 200-yard free and G.T. Ladd grabbed second in the 50 free. Roger Kennedy got UMass' only win of the day in the Men's hoop team finally comes home to the Cage

Minutemen welcome St. Joseph's tonight

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The Curry Hicks Cage hasn't exactly been home sweet home for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, but it has been much a much nicer locale than playing on the road, which has been just brutal for the Minutemen.

UMass, 8-13 overall and 3-9 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, returns to the Cage tonight from a three-game road trip to take on conference rival St. Joseph's University at 7:30 p.m.

The Minutemen have had almost no success on the road, going 2-8, with the only wins coming over New Hampshire and Coastal Carolina. They have given up 100 points five times, all in foreign gyms.

And after tonight, they will return to the road for games against West Virginia and Duquesne.

But the Cage has been kinder to UMass. The Minutemen have gone 6-4 at home (two of the losses were at the team's second home — the Springfield Civic Center), including big conference wins over Rhode Island and Rutgers. The Cage was also the sight of UMass' lone 100-point performance, when it scored 105 points against the Scarlet Knights.

So that it the biggest thing the Minutemen have going for them. They have not played well in the past three games, in road defeats at Connecticut, Holy Cross and Rhode Island.

The main thing that has been missing for UMass has been the inside game. John Milum and John Tate, the big men for the Minutemen, have played better at home this season but have slipped lately and were virtually non-existent (five points combined) at Rhode Island.

The bright spot of late has been the play of George Hardin, a transfer from Salt Lake Community College. Hardin, a power forward, scored five points against Holy Cross and added 11 against Rhode Island.

Freshman forward Jim McCoy, (29 points against Rhode Island and the conference Freshman-of-the-Week three times) has also played well.

But without the big men, UMass hasn't been able to compete.

St. Joseph's, 3-10 in the A-10, is coming off a 91-55 loss to Rutgers, the same team the Minutemen beat by 16.

And although the Hawks lost their biggest weapon of last year, Rodney Blake, to graduation, they still have a couple of strong big men in 6-foot-11 center Ron Vercruyssen and 6-7 forward Marlon Miller.

With a resurgence from Tate and Milum, UMass is certainly capable of beating St. Joe's.

And at least they are finally home, even if it is just for one game.

Four RC members to file assault charges

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Four University of Massachusetts Republican Club members will level assault charges against another campus organization after a brawl with them last Thursday, said Republican Club member Doug Dratch.

Dratch and other Club members Ken Rudy, Brian Darling, and Scott Kramer will file charges against members of the Spartacus League this week in Northampton District Court after the necessary paperwork is completed.

Dratch, who is personally filing two counts of assault against unidentified members of the league, is also looking into filing charges with the Dean of Students in an attempt to disband the organization.

The two groups clashed at a video presentation sponsored by the Spartacus League, a Cambridge based Trotskyist youth club, which was holding a meeting in room 903 of the Campus Center.

It is unclear who instigated the 10-minute wrestling match that took place during the 9 p.m. discussion portion of the meeting, but police said they were called in at 9:28 to quell the fight, which had progressed into the hallway when they arrived.

Kramer, who was treated at University Health Services after his nose was headbutted during the brawl, said he was not suing for monetary damages but didn't clarify what his goals were.

Rudy and Darling, could not be reached for comment at press time.

The Republican Club members contend the trouble did not start until the Spartacists verbally debased the Minuteman, a conservative campus publication that all six of the members who attended the meeting work for in some capacity.

They said when they tried to defend their publication, an attempt to forcibly eject Dratch from the room was made. The tempers of both groups quickly flared and the near 20-person scuffle began.

Advertising industry bias slights minorities

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Organizations that advocate for minorities look at advertisements and product packaging and see so many white faces they see red.

Asian organizations say Asians are seldom used except to advertise ethnic foods. Hispanic organizations make a similar claim. Black organizations say blacks are seldom used except to advertise athletic equipment and products designed specifically for the black community.

The advocacy groups say that minorities are being misrepresented, underrepresented, or not represented at all.

Some examples:

- On the box for the NBA Interactive VCR game, produced by Interactive VCR games, of Vancouver, Wash., two actors are pictured playing the game. One is wearing Magic Johnson's uniform, the other Larry Bird's. Both actors are white, although the real Johnson is black.
- A Western Union commercial features an Asian man speaking in a foreign language. According to George Kondo, a regional director for the Japanese American Citizens League, "The commercial suggest that Asians cannot speak English." The generalization is both wrong and unnecessary, he said.

> "We are portrayed in a costume and given a role to play. That's very sad and very insulting."
> —Raul Yzaguirre

- The figure on a box of Croyden House Chinese Fried Rice is of an Asian — it is difficult to tell which sex the caricature is supposed to be — with almond-shaped slits for eyes.

But representatives for various companies say they do make an effort to represent minorities in advertising and packaging, and listen to their needs.

"We're in a situation of free enterprise. The public votes when they buy your item. Companies react to that vote," said Richard Curd, spokesman for Carnation Co., in Los Angeles. Carnation does use a mix of races in its advertising and packaging, he said.

"Companies cannot be all things to all people. That's not our business," he said. "You don't put somebody on the label to placate a group."

"We are sensitive and listen to groups . . . but there is a limit as to how far you can go," he said, adding that not everyone is going to be satisfied — especially small interest groups. As an example of a small interest group, Curd suggested the left-handed citizens of a small town.

Proctor & Gamble, Citibank, McDonald's and other firms have been named by organizations for their use of minorities in realistic situations. A "realistic situation," according to Alan Dinwiddie, a senior vice president at Uni-World, a black advertising agency in New York, is when "companies look at their advertising and ask how it relates to the real world."

Paul P. Bova, a vice president for the James River Corp., of Norwalk, Conn., manufacturer of Northern bathroom tissue, said the companies decision, made some 15 years ago, to prominently place a black child on some of their

SGA gets bogged down

Conservatives to continue their fillibuster

By ANTHONY PADOVANO
Collegian Staff

During last Wednesday's Student Government Association meeting, certain conservative senators once again managed to steer the student senate away from important issues and mire it in a slough of debate and parliamentary procedure.

NEWS ANALYSIS

After the meeting, during which the principle motion to be considered was the possible ratification of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as SGA co-presidents, many moderate and liberal senators expressed outrage and dissatisfaction at the way the rules were used to filibuster and they vowed there would be a change in the way the SGA is run.

Conservative senators vowed they would continue to filibuster until it is too late for the two to take office. Sen. W. Greg Rothman said he will read the entire student phone book at tomorrow night's meeting when given the floor if that is what it takes to stop the motion from coming to a vote.

This week's meeting should be a litmus test for the rest of the semester, in-

Dukakis defends new tax plan

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - Gov. Michael S. Dukakis contended yesterday that a $735 million tax increase is needed to assure Massachusetts' future, while critics charged it was needed because of present administrative incompetence.

"Can we ask the average tax-paying family to chip in an extra $1.50 a week to make sure that our children are educated, our parents and grandparents are cared for, our workers trained, our environment protected?" Dukakis asked the Legislature's Taxation commitee.

"I say, yes, we can," Dukakis said before a packed Statehouse hearing on the tax package the governor needs to help offset a $636 million budget shortfall this year and to support a $1 billion increase in spending next year.

Dukakis has called for doubling the capital gains tax, increasing levies on cigarettes, alcohol and gasoline and installing new taxes on out-of-state telephone calls and utility equipment purchases.

"In the coming weeks — as we roll up our sleeves and see this fiscal challenge through to a solution, as I know we will — we won't just be debating numbers, we'll be debating values," the governor said.

"We won't be talking about programs, we'll be talking about people. And the stakes won't be the commotion of today, but the Commonwealth of tommorrow."

But House Taxation Chairman John Flood (D-Canton), for months Dukakis' most vocal fiscal critic in the Legislature, called it a "cynical attempt to distort the real issue - this debate is not about ideology and fundamental values. It is about competence."

Dukakis, who made competence the central theme of his unsuccessful presidential campaign, had produced a revenue raising proposal that "offers no hope to the taxpayer," said Flood. "It contains no bold vision, no creative solutions to the challenges

Peace in Mideast forseeable

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Resolving the bitter conflict between Israel and Palestine will not totally eliminate the problems plaguing the Middle East, but Israeli professor Yosef Olmert said the concept of peace between the two nations is edging closer to reality.

In a lecture at Amherst College yesterday, Olmert said although relations are slowly improving, Israel will not yield to pressure to withdraw from Palestine territory until its safety is insured.

"One should not be overly optimistic to any quick or immediate solution," he said. But, "the very fact we can consider the possibilities is a sign [of peace]."

A promise made several months ago by Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat to "renounce all forms of terrorism" in efforts to reclaim territory has drawn skepticism from many Israelis, Olmert said.

"So many Israelis from various political parties are obsessed with the idea that there is nothing to talk about to the PLO because you just don't believe them," he said.

Despite claims that Arafat's promise is superficial, Olmert said the statement significantly altered the PLO's image and strategy.

"They don't accept [Israel]," he said. But, "somehow they have developed the notion that not all Israelis are bad."

Although he condemned the PLO's use of terrorism, Olmert admitted Israel is also responsible for terrorist acts lodged to maintain order in the country.

"When you are faced with this kind of situation, you have to to restore law and order and do it as humanely as possible," he said. "There is no alternative to this."

The PLO advocates the United Nations Resolution 181 drafted in 1947, demanding the right to a Palestine state, but Olmert said Israel will not return occupied territories until safety is assured.

"I believe, with all the pain and agony, that we have no choice but to stay in territories until leaving is part of a comprehensive peace treaty," Olmert said.

"If not, we shall simply create more problems," he said.

Town says water loss will not be a problem

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The cause of Friday's sudden water level drop in Amherst will remain a mystery until the incident is further analyzed, but the town is not suffering a water crisis, said Stanley Ziomek, superintendent of public works.

"There is no crisis," Ziomek said. "There is adequate water for everyone in town."

Amherst's four water storage tanks maintain a daily average level of 61 feet, but on Friday the water level in each tank fell to 40 feet, prompting claims that the town had a water crisis and forcing the University of Massachusetts to cut off hot water to its residents for several hours.

When area colleges are in session, the town pumps nearly 4.4 million gallons of water a day, channelled through five waterways, Ziomek said.

During Friday's incident, however, the town was forced to shut down all water sources except its largest well, which carries 1.8 million gallons per day, he said.

Ziomek said he suspects the incident was caused by a mechanical failure in the system, although workers were unable to locate a water main leak or hydrant defect during a search on Friday.

The situation is under investigation but the source of the problem will not be determined for at least three weeks, Ziomek said.

Despite obstacles, magazine set to publish

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Correspondent

The long awaited issue of the University of Massachusetts' literary and fine arts magazine Spectrum will be coming out this semester in spite of problems with funding and office space.

The magazine, which was created in 1967, had been an annual publication until the last issue in 1986. In 1987, the magazine faced a 50 percent reduction in funds and had to save money over the last two semesters. They began work in January with a total budget of $10,500, $24,500 less than in 1967.

The magazine, due to come out in the early spring, is a mix of the best contributions over the last 20 years and new material.

Charles Francis Carroll, co-managing editor of the magazine, has been on the staff since 1979. He said he is excited about this project although it has not been an easy job.

Over the past two years, Carroll said there has been a power struggle between WMUA and Spectrum over the office space both organizations occupy in the basement of the Campus Center.

In 1986, the Board of Governors unanimously voted in favor of maintaining the Spectrum office. Since then, WMUA has appealed this decision and is trying to move into that office space. The BOG has scheduled another meeting and the outcome could affect Spectrum dramatically.

> "We can put past problems behind us and start fresh."
> —Charles Francis Carroll

"At this point in time," Carroll said, "to have to move all our things to another office would have a definite negative impact on the magazine. Even now, we have problems with art work being handled too much. We had assurances in the past that our office space would be kept. This battle has been ongoing and has taken a lot of energy that could have been directed elsewhere."

Carroll, however, is confident: "I think it's the best literary magazine in the world. We are going to enter it in three magazine contests. I really think we will win all of them. We have a healthy staff. They are very qualified and enthusiastic Carroll emphatically denies rumors of internal conflict with fellow co-managing editor David Lyng.

"The problems Spectrum has had in the past have been mostly external," Carroll said. "Since I have been the only constant member of the editorial board since 1979, I am perceived as a man working solitarily on this project. This is not true. As far as David is concerned, I recruited him. He is a young, gifted, bright student who will do a great job after I am gone."

Lyng, who had previously worked for the smaller literary magazine Fred, has been very active in the production of the forthcoming issue of Spectrum.

"This magazine coming out is worth the wait," Lyng said. "It is hard-bound and about twice as long as earlier publications. Since it is Spectrum's 20th anniversary — actually 21st at this point — we wanted to do something new."

The Spectrum staff have completed layout and the production crew should begin in about a week. Once the magazine is completed, it will be distributed to the seven galleries on campus.

Carroll, who is leaving Spectrum after this publication, said "I am happy to be leaving the organization with these people. It is a strong organization and with the group's experience and talent, Spectrum should continue to maintain the standard it has created in the past."

The future of Spectrum seems promising from Lyng's perspective as well.

"We can put past problems behind us and start fresh," he said. "I think it will be a literary renaissance for the magazine."

Car accident causes damage

By THOMAS RODRIGUES

Police said an accident on Fearing Street Extension near Sunset Avenue Saturday caused a total of $1,400 in damages and involved three vehicles.

The first car, approaching Sunset Avenue, stopped short when a second vehicle appeared to be running a stop sign. A third vehicle collided with the rear of the first vehicle, causing the damage, police said.

In other police reports:

Advising center helps students cope during dormitory disputes

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Students who have been written up in campus residence halls have a place to turn for advice.

The Sylvan Residential Area Judicial Advising Center provides legal advice for students during their involvement in the Housing Services Judicial Procedure, according to Aram Hamparian, co-founder of SAJAC.

Students do not always get a fair deal, he said, because the Housing Services Judicial System is a closed system. Housing handles the entire case and does not answer to anyone outside of housing, he said.

"SAJAC acts as a check on housing," he said.

Hamparian said the student benefits from having the advisor at the hearing because the students are not familiar with the rules and procedures of the system and also because the student is nervous during proceedings.

The center began two and a half years ago, when Hamparian and a group of friends began to informally advise students who were written up, he said.

"Now that we have a name, we will become institutionalized," he said.

Rich Lyons, a SAJAC student advisor, said, "SAJAC is based on students helping students. We are here to make sure the student benefits, not the [Resident Director]."

Hamparian said it is up to the student to contact SAJAC. The student can either call or visit the office in the recreation room of Cashin House to speak to one of the .tu-packages makes common sense.

"You want to appeal to as broad a spectrum of people as possible," he said, adding that he doesn't understand why other companies have not made similar decisions.

But in spite of companies like James River, organizations representing minorities cite more examples of bad advertising than good.

Stereotypes are often subtle, said Antilla E. Trotter, assistant to the chairman at the National Black Media Coalition in Washington. An example, Trotter said, is the Western Union commercial that has a black musical group that needs money to pay for its speeding ticket.

"He says, 'Send the money in a hurry, you dig, or we're not going to make it to our next gig.' He's talking in rhymes," Trotter said. "They sing and dance their way out of the commercial. It's funny and entertaining but it plays off a stereotype of blacks as entertainers or athletes. There's a feeling that this is what black people have to do to get accepted."

Trotter also cited commercials for various airlines and cruises that omit blacks and other minorities, except for low-level positions or as part of the background.

"There's some unwritten rule that blacks don't take vacations, don't fly, don't rent cars. ... We just stay at home and do whatever — and it's just not true," he said.

Raul Yzaguirre, president of the Washington-based National Council of La Raza, an advocacy organization for Hispanics, echoed Trotter's sentiments.

"When you see Hispanics portrayed, too often we are caricatures. We are never presented as multidimensional human beings," he said. "We are portrayed in a costume and given a role to play. That's very sad and very insulting."

Yzaguirre said his organization fought to end the use of the Frito Bandito, a character Frito Lay used in one of its commercials a few years ago. The character, he said, looked like Pancho Villa, the Mexican revolutionary, and stole Fritos from the locals because he couldn't resist them.

Elaine Brodey, who worked in advertising for 20 years before creating her current position as affirmative action administrator for the Screen Actors Guild of New York, said the problem with television advertising often is a lack of thought.

"It's a lack of awareness of other people's culture. ... It is not a given [to use minorities in television commercials]," she said. "We still have to remind agencies of their responsibility and that there is a wide consumer market not being reached."

She said she hopes more companies conduct open casting, which gives any actor or actress, regardless of his or her heritage, the chance at a role.

Other minorities are upset, not because they are misrepresented, but because they feel they are not represented at all.

"We try to fight for exposure of Asian dolls and game," said Irene Wu, president of the Long Island chapter of the Organization of Chinese Americans. "[Companies] don't realize that there is a problem."

Wu's daughter, Jodi, 22, has modeled since she was 4, but Wu said her daughter is the exception. "She made it because she is aggressive."

Douglas Thomson, president of the Toy Manufacturers of America, said the ignorance of the people who created the VCR basketball game is the exception, not the rule.

"Seems to me that [the game's box] is stupid. It would be just as stupid to put a black person in a Larry Bird uniform," he said, adding that although manufacturers try to avoid ignorance, it is difficult for white people to see things the same way minorities do.

Trotter said he's optimistic, saying people do change — slowly. "Awareness doesn't always happen overnight. Sometimes it just creeps up on you."

dicating whether conservatives will be able to set up roadblocks and prevent progress on any of the issues facing the body or whether moderates and liberals can stop conservatives from filibustering entire sessions as was the case last Wednesday night.

Before that meeting, both the liberal and conservative elements were posturing for another heated debate over the constitutionality of the election results. But before the battle could be waged, the conservatives threw a curveball at the senate and caught the student legislative body leaning the wrong way.

Immediately after the meeting was called to order, Sen. W. Greg Rothman and Sen. Brian Darling were antagonistic and aggressive toward SGA Speaker Robert Fadel and they continually interrupted senators during the announcement period, effectively raising the ire and stoking the frustration of both Fadel and much of the senate.

It was during the announcements that the conservatives unleashed their change-up, sending Sen. Lisa Lupo, a staff member of the conservative student newspaper The Minuteman, to the microphone. She asked the senate to suspend the rules so she could enter a last minute motion to condemn The Minuteman for its last issue, which she said was full of "homophobic and heterosexual remarks."

The rest of the senate, aided by some first-class theatrics on the part of conservatives, leapt at the opportunity to exact a little revenge on the conservatives and swallowed the bait — hook, line and sinker.

A member of the Republican club said the move "was a brilliant ploy that really caught the left [liberals] off guard and they swallowed it whole. They [the left] found it appealing that a Minuteman staff member would condemn the paper. They suspended the rules and gave us the opportunity to filibuster. They did it to themselves."

Once the Minuteman motion was on the floor Rothman and Darling used Robert's Rules of Order — the guidelines for parliamentary procedure used in the SGA — in every conceivable way to delay the process of reaching a decision on the condemnation. Rothman and Darling requested five roll call votes, three motions to appeal the ruling of the chair, two calls for quorum, two motions to recess, two calls for division of assembly and one motion to adjourn.

Darling's reason for requesting the roll call votes was the students have the right to know how their senator voted on particular issues. After a long explanation about why students have a right to know what he is doing in the senate, Darling was asked if the motion was a stall tactic. He responded by looking away, laughing and saying with a smile "I don't want to comment on that."

But the move, however brilliant or devious, was within the rules that govern the senate and therefore legal. The vocal conservatives present at the meeting had an excellent working knowledge of RRO and used that knowledge for maximum benefit while the more moderate and liberal senators failed because of their initial inability to understand the motives behind the motion and the inability to use RRO more effectively.

As long as the Silkoff and Rabinowitz issue stays near the top of the SGA agenda, conservatives will keep filibustering, and the liberals, unless they gain more command of RRO, will continue to founder in a sea of confusion and frustration.

The student advisor discusses the student's case and informs the student of his or her rights, he said, adding that the student has the option of having the advisor present at the proceedings. In the case of either the prehearing or the trial, the advisor tells the student what is a fair course of action, he said.

Hamparian said no experience is necessary to become an advisor. An eight hour training session for new advisors, led by Celia Lyon, a judicial assistant for housing in the Southwest Residential Area, is scheduled for early this semester.

we face. It contains no compassion."

To the contrary, Dukakis countered, his revenue package comes after his administration cut $450 million in spending authorized by the Legislature. And, the governor noted, Flood participated in a failed attempt to override part of those cuts in additional state aid to cities and towns.

Republican committee members, Sen. Mary Padula of Lunenburg and Sen. Brian Lees of Springfield, spoke of the resentment their constituents feel about Dukakis seeking higher taxes without additional spending reductions.

But Dukakis suggested the solutions proposed by other states facing similar revenue problems would hurt local governments, already hard-pressed by Massachusetts' Proposition 2½ property tax limit.

Jury finds R.I. man guilty of attempted murder

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) A Superior Court jury yesterday found underworld figure Richard E. Gomes guilty of the gangland style shooting of two men outside a Providence hot dog stand in 1985.

The jury found Gomes guilty of the attempted murder of Arthur Macrae, 26, of Providence and Albert Ortiz, 25, of Boston while they sat in their car outside the restaurant. Gomes was also found guilty of possession of a firearm after a previous conviction.

"I consider Mr. Gomes one of the most dangerous men I've met as a police officer," said Providence police detective Steven Cross, chief investigator of the incident.

Gomes, 55, of North Providence, was ordered held without bail at the Adult Correctional Institutions in Cranston pending a Feb. 24 hearing on motions for a new trial.

He faces a possible 50-year prison sentence. Each of the attempted murder charges carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison and the firearm charge carries a 10-year maximum sentence.

"This was a vicious crime perpetrated on innocent bystanders for no apparent reason," said Thomas Connell, a spokesman for Attorney General James O'Neil. "This serves to take a very dangerous criminal off the street for what we hope is a very, very, long time."

John Cicilline, Gomes' attorney, said there was a question of the credibility of some of the state's witnesses and he would present that argument when asking for a new trial.

Six witnesses testified during the trial before Judge Corrine P. Grande that they saw Gomes at a Providence bar March 17, 1985, the night the shooting occurred at the New York System restaurant in the city's Olneyville section.

Area maple sugar producers face the bite of tree-damaging insects

SPRINGFIELD (AP) Uncertainty about the extent of damage to trees from a leaf-munching insect clouds this year's run as Massachusetts maple sugar producers prepare to set their taps.

"A normal crop for Massachusetts is about 50,000 gallons of syrup and I'd be very surprised if it's any better than 20,000 gallons this spring," Richard Chandler of the Massachusetts Maple Sugar Producers Association, said yesterday.

Chandler, like some other large sugarers in Franklin county, is not tapping his trees this spring. One reason is his concern over lasting damage by the pear thrip. Most other producers, whose maples were defoliated, are cutting back on the number of taps they are setting he said.

In Leverett, town selectmen, worried about the stately maples that line town roads, have asked residents to be conservative in tapping the trees. The sugaring season normally starts in late February and runs through mid-March in Massachusetts. Producers in Vermont, which normally boils about 500,000 gallons of syrup annually, also say they plan to cut back this year, because of thrip damage.

The flea-sized insect dined on fruit trees when it was first introduced into California from Europe in 1904. It also took a liking to sugar maples when it reached the Northeast, and spread across about 2 million acres of prime sugar bush in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut and Pennsylvania last spring, the US Forest Service said.

The infestation has sparked a flood of research projects, but little is known about the long-term effects of the defoliation on what is a prime cash crop in New England.

"I'm encouraged by the sugar levels I found in my trees in January," said Tom McCrumm, another Ashfield sugarer. McCrumm said that when he tested his trees during last month's warm spells he found the sugar content in a cross-section of trees, including some that had been heavily defoliated, averaged 2.4 percent to 2.5 per cent. "That's about as good as we ever get," he said.

Oliver North accountable for crimes

Who do these people think they are? Do they think they're above the law? Why don't they show some backbone and admit to what they have done instead of allowing a scapegoat take the rap for them? I am talking about the Iran-Contra Affair and the Oliver North trial. You've heard of it I'm sure. You're probably sick to death of hearing about it. It's a dead issue, right? Wrong.

Meredith O'Brien

Did you ever stop to think this whole fiasco has been dragged out on purpose so that the public will be tired of it, making the press look like the bad guys for continually picking upon poor Ollie and George? Everyone thought Dan Rather was way out of line for pressing George Bush about his involvement in this scandal when he was just trying to uncover the truth.

I wish the Justice Department would keep out of North's trial so that an attempt at justice can be served. They've tried so many little tricks to keep postponing this trial. Oliver North's attorney originally stated that he needed about 3,500 documents to provide a satisfactory defense. Conveniently, the government refused to release the documents saying they were "confidential" and could hurt our nation's defense. Didn't North's illegal actions hurt our defense (not to mention our credibility)?

Oliver North committed many crimes, such as shredding government documents, lying to Congress, illegally diverting funds to the Contras and selling arms to Iran. North supposedly worked with members of the CIA. Selling arms to a country that calls us "the Great Satan," and uses the ammunition we sell to them to blow us up is a terrific example of our central intelligence. Guess which bearded man with a turban is laughing now?

It angers me that these unelected people were delegated enormous power to conduct our foreign policy. How would it look if an American soldier was shot and killed by Iranian militants, and the shrapnel left in his body had "Made in the USA" on it? The American officials who sold weapons to these Iranians did so because they thought they could create their own laws while pocketing the profits into Swiss bank accounts (gained from the sale of weapons which were bought with taxpayer's money).

Oliver North did not work alone. Someone way up in the government must have given him permission to do what he did. That's why some people say prosecuting him would be wrong; they claim he was acting under orders with the good intentions to free the hostages in Iran (in direct contradiction to George Schultz's statement that we would not make deals with terrorists).

What eludes many of these "Ollie for president" worshippers is that he BROKE THE LAW. No soldier can be ordered to act unlawfully. Both the officer who gives that illegal order and the soldier who follows it are subject to felony charges. Oliver North is not above the law and should go to jail, like any other American citizen would if s/he committed a crime. Maybe sending him to jail would be a good deterrent to those who wish to become heroes like Ollie. Maybe they wouldn't be tempted to commit felonies and then say they can't be aptly defended without a half million classified documents, hoping to walk away clean.

What really gnaws at me is that we still don't know how involved George Bush was. As an ex-CIA director, he must have been very involved in foreign affairs, so don't try to tell me that he knew nothing. Personally, I think that he may have run the entire operation, that he was painted as a wimp on purpose, and that Dan Quayle was chosen as his running-mate for impeachment protection (who in his right mind would want President Quayle??)

The Justice Department has come up with a new way to delay this duly-awaited trial until Friday. Supposedly, there is still a dispute about what information can or can not be released during the trial. So what else is new?

Will justice ever be served?

Responsibility has been lost

A few years ago when the Moonies, Hare Krishnas and other cults were raiding college campuses for recruits, hundreds of parents hired deprogrammers to bodily rescue their kids by persuasion or by force and to make them normal again. It soon developed that there were two approaches to deprogramming. The more popular was to say, "Look what that cult does! You've been deceived, you've been victimized, they took advantage of your good faith!" The alleged victims took months, sometimes years, to return to normal with this kind of psychology.

Rusty Denton

But the more effective deprogrammers said, "Look, here are the wrong things this cult does, as if you didn't already know. You knew about some of their unscrupulous methods before you even joined, and you participated anyway. We'll help you adjust to life outside the cult, but you've got to clean up your act."

Guess what? The second group of ex-cultists straightened out in a matter of weeks, sometimes days. It's amazing what a little personal responsibility can do.

Psychologist Jay Adams has observed a similar phenomenon at mental institutions. Adams is overtly Christian in his approach, but was introduced to the power of personal responsibility by a more experienced professional who was Jewish. Together they would visit mental hospitals, meeting patients deemed hopeless, reviewing their life histories, and then challenging those patients to get rid of a pattern of irresponsibility and of escape from specific obligations in their lives.

Adams has documented many rapid recoveries among these people. Obviously, there is no panacea for mental disease, but Adams' record of success is outstanding in a profession where his peers occasionally wonder aloud whether their services accomplish anything.

I think about that a lot. It's encouraging on the one hand because there's something powerful in the idea of taking responsibility for your own actions. But it's a disturbing idea as well, because Americans are moving away from accountability and into the politics of blame.

Think about it. When was the last time you heard the blame placed where it belongs for "the drug problem?" We blame it on the producers. Right: those heartless Columbians just keep shipping it up; we have to snort it because there's no place left to store it. We blame it on the dealers. Right: they're banging down our doors every night, offering cut-rate prices, begging us to take pill or powder off their hands before it goes bad. We blame it on the drugs themselves. That's a good one — little guerrilla baggies of space dust mugging innocent bystanders in broad daylight.

I've even heard people blame the drug problem on ignorance. Take some responsibility, people. We all know drug addictions and drug syndicates are bad news. They'd be no news at all if Americans didn't order poisons the way they order pizzas.

Denial of responsibility has made us a nation of wimps, of phonies, of stunted personalities. "The dog peed on my assignment." "My ex just didn't understand me." "Hey, it's not my job to report safety violations." "I never would have slept with him if he'd said he had AIDS."

The buck doesn't stop anywhere these days; it's in permanent circulation. Americans seem to think some cosmic janitor will come swooping down to mop up the debris left by their irresponsibility. Let me know if you find him. Until then, let's clean up our act.

Valentine's Day sweetness is sickening

"What's love got to do with it? What's love but a second-hand emotion?" — Tina Turner.

Valentine cookies and cakes. Heart-shaped candies. Flowers, cards, cute stuffed animals. What does love have to do with Valentine's Day? Absolutely nothing.

Valentine's Day is a scam. It is a brilliant ploy by the greeting card and candy industries to market our most sacred emotion. Since no one had the foresight to copyright the words "I LOVE YOU!", it's emblazoned on everything from coffee mugs to boxer shorts. The three magic words are advertising's next victim. Through overexposure, they are in danger of losing their significance and becoming cliche.

My frustration with the commercialism of Valentine's Day began in the first grade, the Age of the Mass Produced Valentine. We all wrote our names on paper bags and taped them to the chalkboard. These were our mailboxes. It was mandatory to send every one of your classmates a valentine, regardless of your feelings towards them. What the teacher had no control over was editorial content. The sheer bulk of Scooby Doo and Mickey Mouse valentines flooding the room made censorship impractical.

Above my name I wrote one of three messages: "I like you," "You're okay," or "I hate you." No one taught me diplomacy at age seven, so I had a lot of practice in apologizing.

Darren Garnick

Flashbacks of this era bombard my mind when I walk through my dorm. "Have you ordered your Valentine Candy-gram yet?" a pushy, bright-colored poster reads. No, I haven't. Leave me alone. I try to hide from the marketing onslaught by burying my head in my favorite newspaper, the Collegian. But there is no escape.

"Send a personal to someone you love in our special Valentine's Day color section," suggests one ad.

"Are you wondering what to give your special friend on Valentine's Day?" asks another. My curiousity is aroused. I want this Valentine's Day to be the best one I've ever had. "Be Unique, Give A Condom Gram!" the ad reads on. As a bonus, free delivery is offered to all the customers on campus. Just like pizza.

This Valentine's Day I am going to drop conversation hearts in a glass of water and watch them melt. I love to see candy hearts dissolve. Especially the pink ones. If I'm in a devious mood, I may speed up the process by using carbonated water. Call it a symbolic celebration of this nation's high divorce rate.

Yes, when I eat candy, I get pensive. Perhaps you also can find sweets intellectually stimulating. When you take a bite out of a pink or red cupcake, dwell on this little eye opener: Food dyes have been linked to cancer and liver disease. While you are munching on those chocolate kisses, tabulate the fat content and ask yourself if there is any relation between cholesterol and heart disease.

I come across as a Valentine Grinch mainly because Valentine's Day has little significance to me. If I were in love right now, my cynical views about commercialism's noose on Cupid would probably die out.

"Some people want to build the world with silly love songs.

But what's wrong with that?" sings Paul McCartney. If you aren't one of the architects, everything's wrong.

Official orders company not to censor magazines

MIAMI (AP)– Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo has told Eastern Airlines officials to allow copies of the Feb. 27 Fortune magazine on the airlines fleet even though that issue carries a less-than-flattering profile of him, Eastern officials said today.

The airline had ordered the biweekly business magazine pulled from its fleet of more than 200 aircraft because it contains a cover story calling Lorenzo, chairman of Eastern's parent company, one of "America's toughest bosses."

"Lorenzo personally instructed that Fortune be put back on the planes," said Eastern spokesman Robin Matell. "He knew nothing about the original decision to remove it. He said we had no business taking it off in the first place. Lorenzo is saying we're not in the business of censorship."

The earlier order had come from middle managers in Eastern's aircraft services support department, Matell said.

According to a report in the Miami Herald, a brief directive to aircraft service managers around the country said: "It's imperative that the current issue of Fortune magazine be removed immediately from all Eastern aircraft.

"Dispose of all copies locally," said the directive. "Have a member of management audit all aircraft to ensure compliance." Managers were told to report to Miami headquarters when the mission was accomplished.

Lorenzo's picture appears on the issue's cover. The brief profile, part of a larger article on tough corporate leaders, calls Lorenzo "a visionary, a dealmaker, a union buster and a showboater."

Valentine's Day holds various vignettes

Boxers with kisses a hit

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

Most students begin to quietly freak when Valentine's Day approaches. They wonder what to give their prospective valentine, how much to spend, where to get it, and how to deliver it, assuming of course, this "valentine" knows they're alive.

While students rack their brains for the perfect gift for their valentine, (or the perfect valentine for their gift), businesses in Amherst ready themselves for the influx of love-struck students.

"We're pretty much going with items that are sure-sellers," said Patricia Boynton at Faces on North Pleasant Street.

Boynton said that the big sellers this Valentine's Day are boxer shorts decorated with hearts or lips, heart-shaped picture frames, and the ever-popular Valentine's Day cards.

"Pink, red and white plush animals always do well on Valentine's Day," Boynton said. "Gifts can range in price anywhere from $2.95 to $60."

Cheetie Kumar, a saleswoman at Sweeties in Amherst, said this year their store is pushing candy and glassware for Valentine's Day.

"Our best-seller is kind of a toss-up between chocolate and mugs or wine glasses filled with chocolate," Kumar said.

Sweeties also has heart-shaped boxes filled with candy, Kumar said, and the sweets can cost 65 cents to $12 per pound.

Bart's Homemade also has a Valentine's Day special. Leslin MacLean, a salesperson for Bart's, said, "For every two-dollar purchase, you get a valentine coupon. You could get 10 percent off any purchase, free coffee, free toppings, or free t-shirts."

But there is still hope for those valentines on your list without a sweet tooth (or on a diet).

Bill Gibson, owner of High Notes, said that the singing telegram and balloon delivery service gives a special 15 percent discount off Balloon-A-Grams and singing telegrams for Valentine's Day.

"Most orders are for the standard balloon bouquet," said Gibson, "but people are asking for metallic and heart-shaped balloons."

Silverscape Design, a jewelery store, doesn't have special Valentine's Day sales, said Brenda Beauboin, a saleswoman, "but we have a big display of heart-shaped jewelry." Prices start at under $25 and go up, said Beauboin.

There is no particular gift that is a hit seller on Valentine's Day, she said. "People come in looking for whatever their wife or girlfriend told them to get."

But if you're broke, and don't have a clue, at least there is always the simple gift of "I love you."

Lovers' day criticized

By COSMO MACERO Jr.
Collegian Staff

Today, Feb. 14, will see more exchanges of candy, flowers, cute greeting cards and wet smooches than any other day this year. It's Valentine's Day, when everyone tells their sweethearts and/or close friends how much they care.

Not everybody, however, approaches this day of love the same way. Many people who are unattached see no need to ship roses off to every person that catches their eye.

> "Last Valentine's Day I didn't even give my girlfriend a card . . . it's a cheap marketing ploy."
> — Tom Tivnan

Others see Valentine's Day as an opportunity to let someone know how they feel about them, an excuse of sorts, to be bold with their emotions. Still others are content with simply dropping a card to mom, nothing fancy or complicated.

"I don't really change my life-style on Valentine's Day. I can't see myself sending a valentine unless I have a girlfriend," said Bob Zerkel, a junior business student.

Another student said she feels valentines should be reserved only for those closest to you: "It's too pushy . . . (to send cards or flowers to people you're merely interested in) I send them to my family."

"If I don't have a girlfriend, I ignore it entirely," said John O'Leary, a graduate engineering student.

"It's definitely too commercialized," he continued.

While Christmas leads the league in tacky ad campaigns and wacky all night sales at second rate department stores, Valentine's Day also contributes its share of sugar coated sweet talk and candy covered junk to the shelves of CVS and Brooks. "Valentine's Day is very commercialized . . . but it's fun," said another student.

"I send valentines to people I date, and to good friends," she added.

"Last Valentine's Day I didn't even give my girlfriend a card . . . it's a cheap marketing ploy," said Tom Tivnan, a junior communications major.

It probably doesn't make this day any more pleasant when one realizes that the add/drop period ended yesterday, and the classes currently on your schedule are yours for the duration of the semester. Interesting how this day of joy and love coincides with a day of such brutal realization for University of Massachusetts students. A full schedule of classes, all in your major, now there's a valentine.

"I would send a valentine to someone that I liked . . . I did," said Penny von Kummer. "It's a nice thing to do. It shows someone that you care."

Often grouped with Halloween in terms of its importance as a holiday, Valentine's Day at least yields a healthy message of love and friendship. For many, today will be the day they ask that special person for a date, or to marry them or to just be friends. There's got to be some merit to that.

Birds' beginning to mate may mark the origin

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

As millions of smitten Americans try to decide whether to buy a Whitman Sampler or a syrupy Hallmark card for their darlings, the history behind St. Valentine's Day goes largely unnoticed.

This is partly because little connection exists between the martyred saint and this annual exchange of affections.

Actually, St. Valentine was the name shared by three different martyrs. Two of whom, a Roman priest and a Bishop of Interamna (modern-day Terni), supposedly died on Feb. 14 of the same year, circa 270 a.d. The third Valentine was killed with several other persons, little else is known about him.

So where do all the poems and red paper come in?

Historian George William Douglas wrote in The American book of Days that the connection arose during the Middle Ages when it was widely believed that the date marks the first day in the year when birds begin to mate. Geoffrey Chaucer mentioned this link in Parliament of Foules:

"For this was Seynt Valentyne's day / When every foul cometh ther to chose his mate."

In a 15th century letter to John Paston, Dame Elizabeth Brews said she saw the date as the ideal time to arrange a marriage for her daughter.

"And cousin mine," she wrote, "upon Monday is St. Valentine's day and every bird chooseth himself a mate, and if it like you to come on Thursday night and make provision that you may abide till then, I trust God that ye shall speak to my husband and I shall pray that we may bring the matter to a conclusion."

Another explanation may lie in the possible confusion of similar pronunciations. The Norman word "galantin," whose "g" is often pronounced like a "v" and means "lover of women," may have been mistaken for the names of the Valentine saints.

The tradition of exchanging valentines on the holiday coincides with the Roman holiday of Lupercalia, which occurred in February. On that day, the names of young men and women were drawn at random in order to match them up. Once these couples were matched, they traditionally exchanged gifts with one another.

By the time the U.S. Postal Service was established, St. Valentine's Day was a well-established tradition. Early in the 20th century, the Chicago post office one year reported delivering 1,250,000 valentines, 25,000 of which were rejected on the grounds that they were too vulgar to be delivered.

In the first decades of this century, the holiday revolved chiefly around the exchange of valentines among children. Today, people continue to personalize their celebration of the holiday which has experienced a myriad of change through the ages.

Gay community says Valentine's Day political Celebration difficult

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The gay community celebrates Valentine's Day with the same flower, candy, and card giving as heterosexuals but some find themselves in a political battle rather than a celebration.

When Zarka Smith, a member of the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance, buys flowers for her partner, she says, she finds her flowers being wrapped in blue trimmings with a blue greeting card under the assumption that she is sending her flowers to a man.

Jay Festa, co-president of the LBGA, contends, "The heart is not gender specific. It's not even sexual. It's a celebration of love and there are different forms of love."

The manifestations of Valentine's Day are heterosexual, Festa says, explaining that the images advertisers pitch for Valentine's Day are usually of a man and a woman.

When special events are advertised such as dinners or dances, he says, the gay community is automatically excluded because the events have a built in heterosexual assumption.

Bringing a loved one to a social dinner, he says, "wouldn't be an expression of mutual love but a political expression of the right to love a particular person." And he adds, "Love is not politics.

"St. Valentine's Day brings a kind of sadness because it is very difficult for gay and lesbian people to publicly celebrate."

He says he would not recommend the gay community publicly express their love on Valentine's Day.

"In a mundane way people stare and people get harassed," he says, adding that he could see Valentine's Day as an impetus for intensified harassment.

Smith says, "I don't really find Valentine's Day brings out any more problems," but adds that she usually participates in social events through the gay community and keeps her complaints to a minimum.

For Valentine's Day she says she will probably decide on giving flowers.

"That's one of my favorite things to buy, but I don't buy candy because too many people worry about eating it. Because I'm a woman, I think about whether I'd want a box of candy, and I wouldn't," she says.

A member of the LBGA, who did not want to give his name, says he wanted to take his partner out to dinner and buy him a small gift and card, "but it's probably not going to happen like that because money is tight."

> "St. Valentine's Day brings a kind of a sadness because it is very difficult for gay and lesbian people to publicly celebrate."
> — Jay Festa

A friend of his set up a candlelight dinner in the residence hall and he says, "I might like to do something like that."

He has secured one element of his celebration: "I wrote a letter just to tell this person how much they mean to me.

"[Valentine's Day] is just as special for me as it is for anyone else," he says. "It's good that it exists because it's a chance to take a step back and tell someone how much you love them. But it's bad it only happens once a year."

He says some heterosexuals might assume that Valentine's Day is their holiday.

"They don't see that it can be just as emotional for homosexuals too. They might think we don't even celebrate it," he says.

Smith says, "I really think it's a great holiday. You need something like that to break up the winter."

A SOFT TOUCH — Lovers holding hands is one way they affirm their love for one another on Valentine's Day.

Chocolates have an amorous tie

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The romantic effect of giving someone a heart-shaped box of chocolates on Valentine's Day could be more than sentimental.

"Chocolate does have amorous value," said George Higgins, a pastry chef instructor at the 8,000-student Johnson and Wales University in Providence, one of the biggest cooking schools in the world.

"A chemical in the chocolate hits a pleasure center in the brain," Higgins said. "As a gift from a lover to a lover, it would certainly help do the trick."

Chocolate contains phenylethylamine, or PEA, a natural mood-altering chemical also found in the human brain.

"Win a lottery, get a promotion, fall in love, especially fall in love, and your PEA level shoots up. You're optimistic, sociable, and peppy," according to "Chocolate, An Illustrated History" by Marcia and Fredrick Morton. "But if things go wrong, especially if something goes wrong in your love life, you turn listless and depressed because your PEA level is down."

Cocoa butter melts at about body temperature, "so when you put good chocolate in your mouth it begins to melt, it becomes a sensual thing," said Gayle Steinhart, of Gayle's Chocolates in Newport, in a telephone interview from her store in Royal Oak, Mich. She said her sales are 20 times normal on Valentine's Day and the day before.

"The taste of chocolate is a sensual pleasure in itself, existing in the same world as sex," sex therapist Ruth Westheimer wrote in her column, "Ask Dr. Ruth."

But there's also an argument against the romantic effects of chocolate.

"I really wonder whether giving chocolate for Valentine's Day is really the best type of gift if one wants to pursue any type of intense, romantic affair," said Judith Wurtman, a research scientist at Massachusetts Institute of Technology's department of nutrition and food sciences. "The high fat and the high sugar content may make you very sleepy."

STRIKING TEACHERS — Teachers from Winooski, Vt., picket in front of Winooski High School yesterday. Teachers failed to reach agreement with the school board on Sunday and went out on strike yesterday morning. Students who arrived at school were sent home.

■ Maple syrup

"But I don't know and nobody knows what it means in the long-run," said McCrumm. He said he plans to hedge his bets by reducing the number of taps he puts on individual trees and not tapping those that suffered heavy defoliation by the insects.

"It seems only common sense not to put additional stress on a tree that may already be feeling poorly," he said. "But some of my maples have been tapped for more than 100 years and are still doing fine. And who knows what they have gone through during that time, including drought and defoliations?"

Christina Petersen, of the extension service at the University of Massachusetts, said she found no significant difference in damage between tapped maples compared with those that hadn't, among the more than 300 trees in western Massachusetts she checked for starch content last fall.

But, she said, this was the first year that the region suffered massive defoliation from the insect. The effects could be cumulative and all of the defoliated trees showed very low or depleted starch levels. "That's a very bad sign," she said.

For the past several years, an early thaw had cut short the sugaring season in Massachusetts.

Where Careers Take Off!

ARTS & LIVING

The chief clears up at Hampden

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

An exhausted Tamala Gordon, a sophomore interior design major said, "The music and attitudes were great. I danced all night."

That was the general consenses last Thursday night of bluesman Eddie "The Chief" Clearwater and his band, as the Chicago based rock-blues band turned the intimate Hamden Theater into one big party room.

The night began as the band (Will Crosby on guitar, Herman Applewhite on bass, and Tim Austin on drums) took the stage and jammed for about fifteen minutes. Crosby immediately proved himself to be an extremely accomplished guitarist in the Jimi Hendrix vein, going so far as to play his guitar with his teeth.

The flamboyant Eddie, dressed in a black and white cowboy shirt and big brown cowboy hat, strutted onstage and asked, "Are we ready to party or what?" From that point on, the stage belonged soley to him, as his talented band seemed satisfied to serve as his rhythm section.

Eddie's deep, gruff voice was perfect for the opening blues number, "Last Night". But it was the rockabilly tune "Toe Up", combined with Eddie's wide, contagious smile, that got the crowd up and dancing.

After a few upbeat tunes from his upcoming album to be released at the end of March on Rooster Records, The Chief performed a seductive version of Muddy Waters' "Just Make Love to You". Although he broke a guitar string in the middle of the song, it just didn't seem to matter, and it wasn't until he broke a second string on a blistering version of Eric Clapton's "Sunshine of Your Love" that he put down his six-string and played air guitar as Crosby took over the lead without missing a beat. Eddie then ran into the crowd, shaking hands and high-fiving everyone as the band played on.

Eddie ran onstage in an Indian headress and the whole place leaped up and danced to "Messin' with the Kid". The festive mood continued while The Chief put his own party-blues stamp on such classics as "On Broadway", Otis Redding's "Sitting on the Dock of the Bay", and James Brown's "I Feel Good". He even duck walked and played the guitar behind his head for Chuck Berry's "Everybody Come On".

After an intermission, the band took the stage without Eddie, and all three of them rattled off brilliant solos. Tim Austin's seemingly effortless drum solo would have made the late Gene Krupa proud.

The Masterful Chief then cooled the frenzied crowd with some old-fashioned blues. But before he called it a night, he threw in one more rocking tune. "There's a Party at My House" (also the tentative title of his upcoming album) brought the crowd to their feet one last time. And if you weren't one of those people, you missed one rockin' blues of a good time.

Meat murders the opposition

By JOHN DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

I had a whole bunch of clever openings prepared, mostly variants on the theme of how even though the weather is cold out, there's still a lot of hot music happening. OK, so it's not brilliantly original, but you try conveying an impression of a band's sound in print while also being amusing. It's a moot point anyway, since the unseasonably warm weather has put paid to any meteorologically oriented humor. So let's just skip the smart-aleck remarks and get right on with the meat of the article.

Meat figures prominently in today's first band. They are called Meat Beat Manifesto and they are a British group (All the best ones are - Ed.) who construct carefully preprared sonic assaults which leave you feeling as if a bunch of elephants have just run you over. In anticipation of the usual question, let me reassure you that, yes, I do like listening to music that makes me feel as if a herd of elephants has just run me over.

Huge, grinding rhythms underpin the songs, rapper Jack Dangers and cohorts-in-noise, Piranha Jones and DJ Greg Retch build a multi-layered aural collage that threatens at any moment to leap free of the speakers, pin you against the wall and demands that you pump up the volume before it rips out your earring and gives you a really lame haircut.

Their current single is an anti-religion escapade entitled "God O.D." Dangers cuts loose with a nasty rap in which he declares that "The word of the Lord makes me break out screaming," while all aruound him the beat thunders and old funk riffs are fed into the sample machine, to emerge seconds later in mutant support of his vocal excursions. It's hypnotic, disturbing and frantic. You'll believe a man can fly.

There isn't a lot of material available from this band, unfortunately. Work was proceeding on an album called Armed Audio Warfare but a fire in the band's SoHo headquarters destroyed the master tapes. There are a few previous Meat Beat Manifesto sinlgles still in print, including the physical fitness oriented "Strap Down" and a street-wise number entitled "I Got The Fear." Available as imports on the Sweatbox label, the records care hard to find but well worth the effort. You won't hear anything like it for a while; I guarantee it.

The Justified Ancients of Mu Mu (a.k.a. the Timelords) are a band that not many people have heard of in the States. Try to imagine a hip hop outfit whose lead rappers have thick Scottish accents. It's a riot and their wild sense of humor doesn't hurt either. Their first album, 1987, What the Fuck is Going On got them into a lot of legal trouble, since they sampled ridiculous amounts of other people's songs (most notably ABBA's "Dancing Queen") and as a result, they were sued down to their underwear and the album was ordered destroyed by the Swedish combo's lawyers.

Fortunately for posterity, a two-record retrospective of their career has recently been released under the title, Shag Times. It's an import on the KLF Communications label, and, as usual, is hard to find. Sadly it only contains one track from the "Illegal" album, but the rest of it is excellent and well worth the money. That about wraps it up for this survey of new goods. Until next time, see you in the record store!

Our regular Disc Junkie, Graeme Thomson, has reportedly checked into an addrop crisis center, but he should be back next week.

COME FLY WITH ME! The blood under Eric Stoltz's nose is just a sample of the powerful gore which peppers The Fly II. Stoltz fared well in another grotesque role opposite Cher in Peter Bogdanovich's critically acclaimed Mask . . . not so say the critics of this ill fated sequel.

TAP yields tangible plot plus Hines' fast feet

By KARL ROOKEY
Collegian Staff

Tap
Mt. Farms Theatres

The movie Tap is, of course, about tap dancing, but if you've written it off as another one of those flash-in-the-pan success stories, whose dancing bedazzlement is lightly frosted with plot, think again.

Perhaps the most pleasing aspect of the movie is its depth: the plot gives the audience something to chew on, and the characters are portrayed as real, with motivations and feelings to match their actions.

In fact, Tap dedicates itself to the story behind the dance and more specifically on the fictional main character, Max Washington (Gregory Hines).

Max was a rising star in the sixties when tap dancing suddenly went out of vogue. With dancing no longer a viable way to make a living, Max entered a better paying racket - burglary - and became known as the best 'second-story man' in the business. The best, that is, until the night of his father's funeral.

Max got a little drunk before the 'job' that night, and when he didn't come out of the building on time, his friends in the getaway car left him for the cops.

The movie begins with Max leaving prison, where he has started dancing again to keep himself sane. "Just when I felt I was about to go over the edge, I started hearing these (tap) combinations in my head ... they'd pull me back," Max explains later in the movie.

Now, back on the streets of New York, Max faces the same choice he had almost twenty years earlier: try his luck as a hoofer, and do what he loves most, or return to the sure money offered by the world of crime.

Gregory Hines demonstrates some superb acting in the part of Max, and the audience can almost feel the tension during the crucial robbery scene. From the start of the movie, Max is a character the audience can really care about.

The cast includes a number of tap dancing's greatest headliners, and it is a real thrill to see these older men, whom Max accuses of having 'no legs,' show their stuff.

Sammy Davis, Jr.'s portrayal of Little Mo, the mentor who feels Max could take tap dance into the future, is another outstanding performance, and the rapport between Hines and Davis works beautifully.

Also worthy of mention is the performance by Sandman Simms of himself as an old sour puss ("That's my step alright, they stole it from me. I'd recognize my steps anywhere.")

The movie hinges around a huge dance scene in the streets of New York City, when Max explains to a group of tap dancers how his father taught him to use the sounds of the city to devise new tap steps. Although this sequence comes close to the limits of reality, it is necessary to make the audience aware of the music created by the city, which becomes important during the later robbery.

Tap is not going to be the masterpiece of 1989, but it struggles valiantly to free itself from the sickly-sweetness of previous dance films by offering a serious storyline. Tap is easily a three star film, I recommend it for the amazing dance, but all dancing aside it's worth taking in.

Mentalist takes Mt. Holyoke crowd on psychic trip

By STEPHEN PANGIONE
Collegian Correspondent

"What I do is a combination. Part is illusion, part is psychological and part is what some call ESP," mentalist Craig Karges told 400 people Friday night at Mount Holyoke College's Blanchard Hall. He then proceeded to 'amaze' the audience with stunts ranging from mind reading, to X-ray vision, to levitating furniture, using nothing but the power of his mind.

The performance, sponsored by the Something Every Friday Commmttee, started at 9 p.m. and ran more than an hour, as Karges used volunteers for all his feats.

Karges handed out about 50 slips of paper to the audience, and asked them to write their initials, an address and a thought, and leave it in their pockets. Asking the entire audience to concentrate, he picked out the strongest "signals" and then told people about themselves.

"You are from Oregon and you were thinking about your new baby kitten," he said, pointing to a woman in the audience. He followed by saying her name, address and birthdate. She showed the rest of the audience her slip of paper with that exact information on it.

"I don't like to think of myself as a psychic. I'm just an entertainer," he told the audience.

Karges asked five men to assist him on stage. "They look like an ad from a J.C. Penny catalog," he laughed as they all stood against the wall. Karges then asked them to each put a personal belonging into a separate bag and then mixed all the bags together.

He then picked up each bag and by feeling the objects through the bags, correctly identified the owner of each.

Karges, a native of West Virginia, said he has been interested in magic since he was 12. When he was 14, his uncle began teaching him the mind-reading part of his show. "My uncle used to perform at Vaudeville reading a crystal ball," he said. After he finished school he decided to keep doing his show for a living.

Since then, Karges has appeared across the U.S. and Canada, and has been on P.M. Magazine twice. He also appears regularly on The Nashville Network.

Karges said he doesn't like appearing on t.v. "I don't want to be a famous celebrity," he said, "I just like to entertain people."

Karges does want people to believe in him. He has a standing offer of $10,000 to be donated to a charity if anyone can prove he consorted with a member of the audience beforehand.

Karges believes in himself as well. At the end of his performance, he took his paycheck for the show and sealed it in one of three envelopes. He asked a woman in the audience to mix them up and pick one. After burning the other two envelopes, he asked her to open the envelope she picked inside was his paycheck, for a job well done.

Bim returns with refined show

Bim Skala Bim
February 11
Universal Joint

Bim Skala Bim, arguably Boston's best ska band, returned to the Pioneer Valley Saturday night at the Universal Joint, downstairs at Pearl Street, sounding better than ever. Between their Stop C.I.A Recruitment benefit gig last July and December's gig at Katina's, the band made noticeable improvements.

They have new arrangements for many of their songs, making their set a more interesting listen. For example, Vito's trombone is now part of the rhythm section on "Run Joe", and the organ and guitar have lead parts in several songs, including "Veil of Sadness". Bim succeeds with other Carribean rhythms, such as calypso. Finally, the vocalists improved. Look for evidence in Dan Vitale's smooth grunt in their cover of Desmond Decker's "Shanty Town".

After the set, bassist Markus F., drummer Jim Arhegler, and guitarist Jim Jones partly credited the tighter sound to t' band having their own soundman. They also talked about their recent tour of Britain with the reunited Bad Manners (one of the original 2-Tone bands who'll soon be touring America). Despite the skinheads outside of London who thought they were "hippies", they received a good response, especially in Scotland. Their favorite bands? From their hometown: Dogzilla, Shy Five, Hullabaloo and Hell To Pay; Gangster Fun from Detroit; and L.A.'s Donkey Show.

Bim Skala Bim, whose current line-up is about three years old, have put out their second full-length LP, entitled Tuba City. It was recorded and mixed in Boston and New York and produced by the band with Bill Taylor. The record is slated for domestic release on February 20th on Celluloid Records.

Presently, Bim is planning a show in Nashville and a tour of the mid-Atlantic states. They play the Channel in Boston with Dogzilla on February 25th, and the Ritz in New York City with none-other-than the Skatellites, a Jamaican band who helped develop ska in the 60's.

If you don't want to travel, sit tight. Bim makes a monthly pilgrimmage to the Valley. When they do . . . get ready to skank!

TREY ANASTASIO and the rest of the Burlington Vermont natives who make up the band Phish proved once again last Friday night why they're one of the fastest rising bands around these days. Headlining act the Radiators had to take a back seat at the SUB show.

YOUR HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A generous friend may surprise you today. Recognition will come if you keep your nose to the grindstone. Resolve your differences with partner before "in intelligent" compromise works wonders.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) The balance of power within a partnership is not as clear as it once was. It's time to take some performance pressures off yourself. Love is everywhere now. Pursue shared goals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A question at work vs. home has you an edge. Better communication will help resolve conflict. Your finicky attention to detail improves the product's quality but irritates your associates. Keep any criticism impersonal.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Listen to your intuition and change your plans. You benefit from knowing the right move to make. Money talks; get bogged down today. You can have your way if you refrain from pushing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You are glad you used caution when making a purchase. Your need to be alone is understood by those who really count. Ignore petty comments. A romantic relationship grows in its intensity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You may be in a restless mood. Take a walk, or if you want to unload, find someone you can talk to in confidence. A child needs your support. Give a relationship time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You could find a gold mine in the attic or garage. Do not get discouraged if others seem to be zooming past while you plod along, remember the tortoise and the hare.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You enjoy special rapport with an important group today. New associations will be lucky. As the day ends, new guidelines are announced. Your dreams are prophetic. Do not ignore your hunches.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You may be asked to deliver a message you would rather not. Be tactful. You are in a good position to teach children some pertinent lessons about money management. Set guidelines.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Consult with a variety of experts today - the more the better. Secret worries could make you sound abrupt at work. Let others take your phone calls. Spruce up your wardrobe with clever additions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) If thinking of pursuing a favorite fantasy today, remember that you might prefer the illusion. A new financial arrangement is possible in late afternoon. Push for the best deal you can get.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Go along with partner's plans for this Valentine's Day. Your children and mate need special reassurance now. Reach out with understanding and affection. Saying the right thing at the right time strengthens ties.

Grand Jury called to hear highway murder case.

NEW BEDFORD (AP) - The Bristol County district attorney yesterday called for a grand jury probe into the murders of six women to help obtain information from reluctant witnesses.

In the first indication that prosecutors are making progress in the murder investigation, District Attorney Ronald Pina announced he will call into session a special sitting of the county grand jury. The 23-member body will hear testimony behind closed doors from undisclosed witnesses.

Pina emphasized that investigators are not prepared to seek an indictment in the case.

The bodies of six women – who have been linked by investigators to the city's drug community – were found near this southeastern Massachusetts fishing port from July through December. One of the murder victims remains unidentified. Pina has said since November, when the body count was increasing, that the murders appeared to have been committed by a single killer or killers working together.

Pina said in a statement that certain witnesses have information that could help the investigation. "And I feel it is their obligation to come forward, and we will do whatever is necessary, including the use of the grand jury, to obtain that information," he said.

The panel is scheduled to begin its proceedings March 1.

One of the reluctant witnesses is former New Bedford-area lawyer Kenneth Ponte, who knew at least two of the victims and had a record of drug-related offenses, according to James Martin, a spokesman for Pina.

Harvard nabs Beanpot

BOSTON (AP) – Goals by Ted Donato and Tod Hartje gave heavily favored Harvard its first Beanpot championship in eight years last night with a 9-6 win over Boston University.

Donato scored what proved to be the winner late in the second period, his eighth of the year for the 20-2 Crimson, the nation's second-ranked hockey team.

Hartje got his third of the season at 16:19 of the third period to assure the victory, and John Weisbrod got his second of the night, an open net goal, in the waning seconds to cap one of the highest scoring games in the recent history of the 37-year-old championship.

Harvard had jumped to a 3-0 lead in the game, but BU roared back with four straight goals and a lead that lasted only 14 seconds early in the second period.

Weisbrod retied the score at four and Mike Vukonich, with his second goal of the night, put the Crimson ahead to stay 1:41 later in the second period.

Lane MacDonald, Harvard's Hobey Baker candidate, made it 6-4 with a short-handed goal at 10:19 of the second. BU's Dave Sacco cut the lead to one on the Terrier power play at 15:18 and Sacco's brother, Joe, also scored on the BU power play to make it 7-6 in the third period before Donato and Hartje settled it.

possession of the ball," Hewelt said. "We feel we can play with them in a quarter-court game."

With home games coming up this week against Penn State and St. Bonaventure, UMass would benefit greatly from a win tonight. The team needs something to break out of a slump that has seen just one win (and an uninspiring overtime one over a not-so-good Rhode Island team at that) in its last seven outings.

Included in that dry spell was this weekend's empty trip south to play Temple and George Washington. The Minutewomen went down with hopes of at least one win, but dropped both to fall farther into the doldrums.

"We're not executing as well as we can. Now we're trying to deal with the frustration," Hewelt said.

Something a single win could go a long way toward curing.

behind Boston College (2nd, 605.63) and Plymouth State (1st, 601.06). Rick D'elia of Umass skied two good runs to place second in 117.97, a thin .12 of a second behind Jeff Hamilton of Plymouth State. Also finishing in the top 10 for UMass was John Roche, who shied into an 8th place.

On Sunday, the men were simply overpowered by Plymouth State, who swept the top three spots. The Minutemen, in fact, have only one senior. PSC easily took first in the slalom in 412.58. UMass grabbed third in the event with 426.58.

"Plymouth State and BC have more depth than we have," UMass head coach Bill MacConnell said.

Roche's 4th place finish was tops for UMass, the junior skied the course in 84.08. Also placing for UMass was D'elia (9th) and John Donovan (10th).

The UMass women raced to a second place finish in the giant slalom on Saturday with a time of 395.48. Boston College was way out in front with a 377.96. UMass freshman Marcy Blacker had 3rd place with a time of 127.18 and Mary Sinton was next for UMass in 12th place.

Sunday also wasn't a very successful day for the women, who, although they took 3rd in the slalom, were a huge 76 seconds behind the first place Boston College.

"It was just a case of everybody trying to win the race," said MacConnell, whose top finsher top finisher in the slalom was Marti Gilbert in 12th place. Sinton and Blacker, the previous day's best for the Minutewomen, tried to do too much, according to MacConnell, and consequently suffered falls on their runs.

MacConnell said he wants his team to develop a stronger team concept, rather than individuals attempting too much. He said he believes a more balanced and relaxed effort will help his team fare better at Berkshire East this coming weekend.

Minutemen nudge past St. Joseph's, 72-68

Tate scores four in final minute to lead UM.

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

John Tate had a solid game last night. Not a spectacular game, but a good game.

At crunch time, however, Tate showed everyone he was ready.

The sophomore forward made a layup with 39 seconds left to give the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team the lead, then drew a charge and hit both free throws to give the Minutemen a 72-68 victory over St. Joseph's University in an Atlantic 10 Conference game at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"I hadn't played that well earlier in the game," Tate said. "But I didn't want to lose like that. I wanted the ball at the end."

And his teammates got him the ball in the final minute, when he bullied his way inside and put the ball in to make it 70-68.

With eight seconds left, Tate stepped in front of Ray Washington of St. Joe's in time to give Washington his fifth foul, and give himself an opportunity to go to the foul line.

To cap things off, Tate, who had been successful from the foul line 79 percent of the time coming into the game, calmly sank both shots to boost UMass to 4-9 in the conference and 9-13 overall.

The win gave the Minutemen a 7-2 record in the Curry Hicks Cage this season.

"The A-10 has some hostile crowds," Tate said. "It's nice to be at home where the friendly faces are."

And Tate was very friendly to the 2755 fans who showed up last night.

"The funny thing is, I thought we were going to lose the game because of the way Tate played over the last four minutes," UMass coach John Calipari said.

"He was giving up too many offensive rebounds. But in the end, he ended up winning it for us and that shows me he has courage."

Tate and John Milum, UMass' other big man, had struggled in recent games, but both produced last night.

Tate led the Minutemen with 17 points and 12 rebounds and Milum added 11 points and 11 rebounds.

"If Milum and Tate come to play, we can play with almost anybody," Calipari said. "If they don't, there's not a team in the country we can beat."

Even the victory over the Hawks, 3-11 in the A-10 and 6-17 overall, was probably closer than Calipari would have liked.

In the middle of the second half, while the St. Joe's Hawk was losing his feathers on the court, the Minutemen appeared to be in control. And UMass led by seven, 65-58, with less than five minutes to go.

But led by Washington, who had five points before fouling out, the Hawks slowly climbed back into it, and tied it at 68-68 with 2:24 to go on a Henry Smith layup. Smith led all players with 19 points and 15 rebounds.

It was the same story in the first half. With UMass leading 24-19 with 5:51 to go, Anton Brown scored eight straight points for the Minutemen on two three-pointers, and a layup following a Jim McCoy steal.

Brown finished with 16 points and six assists.

But despite Brown's efforts, St. Joe's outscored UMass 8-3 over the rest of the first half pull within eight, 35-27, at halftime.

McCoy had 10 points in the first half, but was held to just two free throws in the second half.

"He's something," St. Joe's coach Jim Boyle said. "But I think our guys that were guarding him matched his athletic ability."

"It's amazing for us to win with absolutely nothing from Jim McCoy in the second half," Calipari said. "But McCoy's still happy. As far as he's concerned, whoever scores is fine, at long as we win."

As Tate showed last night, he is perfectly willing to do the scoring when it's needed.

Minutewomen to entertain Harvard

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Sometimes non-conference games are regarded as simply a break in the schedule. However, as the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team prepares to face non-league foe Harvard University tonight at the Curry Hicks Cage (7:30 p.m.), that couldn't be farther from the truth.

At this point in the season, the meeting with the Crimson being the last interleague game before a string of Atlantic 10 conference match-ups, UMass will be going into this one looking to pick up a couple of things that have been lacking of late — confidence and a victory.

It can be argued that one feeds off the other, and that is the philosophy that coach Kathy Hewelt will look to sell her team on for tonight's contest.

"This is an important game for us. We need to feel positive, and see success on paper," Hewelt said. "A 'W' would be a big lift for us."

However, Harvard is not going to be an easy game by any stretch of the imagination. The Crimson currently sit atop the Ivy League with a 6-1 mark (12-6 overall), tied for the top spot with Dartmouth. Harvard did beat Dartmouth in their only meeting of the season, 81-67.

Just for comparison sake, Dartmouth beat UMass, 73-60 on Jan. 23 in Hanover, N.H.

That doesn't bode well for the Minutewomen, but the one advantage they do have is that they are at home, the first of three games in friendly Curry Hicks this week.

Harvard comes in featuring a powerful front line of Beth Chandler and Sarah Duncan. The six-foot senior co-captains are the team's top two scorers and rebounders, with Chandler averaging a team-high 17.2 points and 9.8 boards with a career-high 32 points in the win over Dartmouth. Duncan is chipping in with 14.6 points and 9.3 rebounds a game, and has 70 blocked shots. Junior guard Heidi Kosh averages 11.2 points per game and has dished out 96 assists.

"They're a good team with a deep bench. We have to play extremely well," Hewelt said. "Duncan is the player we feel we have to stop. She's a good inside-outside player and a good shot blocker."

Harvard will also try to win the game by bugging the Minutewomen with a full-court press, according to Hewelt.

"We have to come out and keep our composure and keep

McCoy named A-10 frosh of the Week for the 4th time

For the fourth time this season, the University of Massachusetts' freshman forward, Jim McCoy, captured the Atlantic 10 Freshman-of-the-Week honors.

McCoy, who had 12 points in last night's 72-68 win against St. Joe's at the Cage, earned the honor by pouring in 29 points in both of UMass' away games last week

Women's track gets record-breaking performance at Holy Cross Invitational

By RICK SETO
Collegian Correspondent

In track and field, records are usually broken by small, if not minute margins. But Tina White totally disproved that theory as she just smashed, shattered, and utterly destroyed her own school record in the 20-pound indoor weight. Her performance was the highlight for the University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team at the Holy Cross Invitational Sunday.

White broke the record for the second time in as many weeks in a UMass jersey by a phenomenal twenty-two inches. Count 'em, 22. That's almost two feet!

She threw 41 feet, 8 inches, which was surprisingly only third place in the event. Last week at the Ocean States, she threw 39'10' in her UMass debut.

When asked about White's fantastic performance, UMass coach Julie LaFreniere did not even have to think about who deserves some of the credit: assistant coach Jim Giroux.

"Jim is the one who works with them. He's really developed that group of athletes. I can't say enough about him. He's done a great job. The kids are responding very well, and it's showing," said LaFreniere.

In addition, Simone Marisseau was close, but not close enough in the shot put, as she missed the New England qualifying standard by a mere two inches. She did, however, win the event with a throw of 37 feet, 10 inches. "She's very close. She consistently threw 36'6' and up for her six throws," said LaFreniere. Marisseau also threw 30'11' in the indoor weight. Helen Balaouras had perhaps the most balanced meet results. She finished third behind Marisseau in the shot (36'7') and fifth in the indoor weight (38'0').

The last of the throwers, Diane Ozzolek, came close to setting a personal best in the shot (28'6') and placed eighth in the weight (32'6').

The throwers have been working with Giroux since the fall, with the discus and the hammer, which is different from the indoor weight, but it involves basically the same techniques. One newly implemented part of their training has been lifting weights, which is now apparently paying off.

One who has benefited has been White, who transferred over to UMass from Worcester State. "I know Tina was not as strong as was before she started training with us," said LaFreniere. The runners, meanwhile, have been working out as usual and LaFreniere has been resting some of them. The likelihood that a runner will qualify for the New Englands or the ECAC's now is unlikely, since track conditions at Dartmouth next weekend (UMass' last meet before the championships) are not very fast.

Track Notes: LaFreniere has enjoyed a successful first year as head coach of UMass. Previously, she had been an assistant coach under Kalekeni Banda, who moved onto Amherst College.

Regents plan drastic reforms for schools

By the Associated Press

BOSTON — In a move that came without public warning, the governing body of the state's public higher education system voted yesterday to propose a revamping of the entire system, with the possibility of consolidation of some schools and programs.

The move by the state Board of Regents in Higher Education comes at a time when the state's 29 public colleges and universities are battling other state agencies for money in a tight fiscal year.

"We're going to look at everything: closings, mergings, trimming down and expansion," said higher education Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer.

A motion approved unanimously by the regents calls for a review of the current system, "in light of the current and prospective student population we serve," and to "identify additional resources that may result from a possible restructuring of the system that could be used to benefit all our public colleges."

A draft version of the report, prepared by the regents' staff, would be ready for next month's meeting and a final set of recommendations would be ready for approval in May.

Regents refused to say whether the ideas under consideration would result in a more streamlined or an expanded higher education system that now serves some 190,000 students.

But Terry Zoulas, a spokesman for the board, said in referring to the current fiscal situation, "You know that Bob Dylan, song, 'You don't have to be a weather man to know which way the wind blows.'"

Jenifer said many of the restructuring moves would be confined to the University of Massachusetts, which has campuses in Boston, Worcester and Amherst. But he said major changes at all the state public colleges and universities would be considered.

The University of Massachusetts, flagship of the state higher education system, has had its disagreements with the regents, according to commission spokesman Mark Horan.

A study by staff of the regents, the results of which have not been made public, has been going on for nearly two months, according to Zoulas.

Former US Sen. Paul Tsongas, who is the chairman-designate of the regents, strongly endorsed the ideas to be pursued by the study.

Tsongas has not yet assumed the chairmanship because he is ironing out a possible conflict of interest question over whether he can continue to serve as a partner in a major Boston law firm while also sitting on the board. The firm, Foley, Hoag & Eliot, represents several state colleges and universities.

Tsongas has vowed to be a strong advocate for higher education and for more

Frat plans bonfire to protest state budget cuts

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts fraternity is sponsoring a bonfire at the campus pond tonight to "let off steam" about cancelled classes, tuition hikes and state budget cuts.

Dave Shaskowitz, a member of Phi Mu Delta, said the bonfire will be lit at 7 p.m. and will last for 36 minutes, as permitted by the Amherst Fire Department.

Students will be able to rally around the bonfire to vent their anger over recent events, including long add/drop lines and cancelled courses, he said.

"The students are upset with the way things are going with classes," Shaskowitz said. "It seems like a good way to burn off steam."

Lieutenant Mike Grabiec said he does not know if the UMass police will be on hand to contain the event, but said officers will be patrolling the campus if help is needed.

"We're just like the big brother," Grabiec said. "We watch you all the time."

Alumni invention to change neon light

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

An invention by a University of Massachusetts graduate may change the face of advertising. It could also result in neon lights appearing on all major highways, and may one day replace lightbulbs and fluorescent tubes.

"In 10 or 20 years you're going to see this all over the world," said inventor Michael Garjian, president of the Chicopee-based Neon Technology Corporation, at an unveiling of his lighting system last Friday.

According to a press release, the process, called Plateglass Neon, eliminates the need to bend glass tubing to produce a neon image. The tubes are replaced with quarter-inch-thick glass plates containing channels which, when filled with neon, produce the image. A small transformer supplies the needed current.

HRTA profs named in lawsuit

Former assistant charges racial bias

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

A former University of Massachusetts professor has filed a lawsuit that charges the University with racial bias and discrimination in employment practices.

The $1 million civil suit filed Monday at U.S. District Court in Springfield by Steven A. Croffoot of Amherst, a Sioux Indian, names the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and UMass professors Stevenson W. Fletcher and Robert H. Bosselman as defendants in the case.

Croffoot's suit charges he was discriminated against because he was physically handicapped, that his privacy was invaded, his contract was breached, the University was negligent and that he was defamed.

He said he had been hired in 1980 as a lecturer and assistant professor in the Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration Department of the College of Food and Natural Resources. Fletcher was chairman of the department and Bosselman was an assistant professor at that time, he said.

Croffoot, who said his handicap was a severe shoulder injury that required surgery in July 1985, claims the reason the University gave for dismissing him in 1986 — failure to make progress on a doctorate dissertation — was false.

He said that while he was recuperating, the pain in his shoulder worsened, his arm was put into a splint and he took pain killers. During that time he says he was harassed by Fletcher. In February 1986, he requested an applica-

"Basically, we embroider neon through plates of glass," Garjian said. "It means that we can get detail never thought possible with hand techniques."

Turner wins Hasty Pudding award

CAMBRIDGE (AP) - Kathleen Turner wore drop-dead red, shimmied and joined in a chorus of "Wild Thing" as she accepted Hasty Pudding Theatricals' 1989 Woman of the Year award yesterday.

As is traditional, Ms. Turner engaged in off-color banter with Harvard University students, who since 1951 have given the award and a good roasting each year to the performer "who makes a lasting and impressive contribution to the world of entertainment."

The students compiled a list of adjectives to describe Ms. Turner: "Hot, steamy, smouldering, sizzling, torrid, blazing, sweltering, simmering, seething, balmy."

"Oh, that was Sesame Street," the movie heartthrob quipped.

Ms. Turner made her 1981 film debut in 'Body Heat" and recently starred in "The Accidental Tourist." She also was the voice of Jessica Rabbit in the cartoon, "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," in which her most memorable line: "I'm not bad; I'm just drawn that way." Ms. Turner said her roles in "Accidental Tourist" and "Roger Rabbit" may compete for this year's Academy Awards.

"I'm told I may be up against myself for supporting actress as both Sarah and Jessica Rabbit," she said before accepting the small brass Hasty Pudding pot.

Asked by reporters about her throaty voice and faintly foreign accent, Ms. Turner replied, "It's because I grew up in South America and England and because I'm a little affected."

Before the ceremony, Ms. Turner was paraded through Harvard Square on the back of a 1947 Lincoln Contintental convertible, flanked by male Harvard students in drag, a tradition that dates back to the days when the university's constitution forbade men to wear women's clothes.

Previous recipients of the award include Lucille Ball, Katherine Hepburn, Meryl Streep and Elizabeth Taylor.

Actor Robin Williams will accept Hasty Pudding's 1989 Man of the Year Award on Feb. 21 at the opening of the annual student production, "Whiskey Business."

Khrushchev's son lectures at Harvard

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The son of former Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev, on his first trip to the United States in 30 years, said yesterday there is greater opportunity for improvement in superpower relations today than at any time since his father's ouster in 1964.

"In the past, unity between peoples was considered science fiction. But today, we see that as a real possibility," 54-year-old Sergei Khrushchev said at a Harvard University news conference.

The heavyset, balding computer scientist, who bears a striking resemblance to his father, had come to the university for a Soviet-American panel summary of a six-year Harvard study of the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, which took the superpowers to the brink of nuclear war.

Khrushchev, whose father faced President John F. Kennedy in the showdown praised two new books resulting from the study that calls from the United States and the Soviet Union to move away from military confrontation and toward "sustainable peaceful competition."

But while some panelists described improvements in understanding the missile crisis, Khrushchev stressed the continuing misunderstandings, including that what he said was an inaccurate report that Fidel Castro asked his father to launch a nuclear strike against the United States.

"It seems to me that the main thing is, we've come to understand how poorly we actually understand each other, and those misunderstandings have led to missteps even at the highest level," said Khrushchev.

In contrast to his father vividly remembered by Americans as a hot-tempered leader who once slammed his shoe in anger on a table at the United Nations, Sergei Khrushchev appears soft-spoken and urbane.

In an attempt at levity, Khrushchev tried to tell a story about his youth, but as if to prove his point about misunderstandings, the story fell flat when a translator muffed the punch line.

Khrushchev said that a similar loss in translation may have led to the reports that Castro requested a nuclear strike.

Those reports originated at a conference in Moscow last month that brought some of Nikita Khrushchev's advisers, aides to President John F. Kennedy, Cuban officials and leading scholars together for the first time to discuss the missile crisis.

Some news reports said Sergei Khrushchev, who took part in that conference, had told their pariticipants that on Oct. 26. 1962, near the height of the missile crisis, Castro sought a preemptive nuclear strike on the United States to forestall what he believed was an imminent invasion of Cuba.

Both the Soviet and American panelists yesterday denied hearing Sergei Khrushchev say such a thing at the conference. They included Sergo Mikoyan, son of former Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan, who said the reports had resulted either from a misunderstanding by an American journalist or an "absence of will to understand."

Schools to fight cuts

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Students at colleges and universities across the state will unite next month as part of a week-long effort to combat tuition and fee hikes resulting from budget cuts, said Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice.

Orefice said she and Michael Greiner, chair of Public policy, met earlier this week with student representatives from 26 of the 29 state colleges and declared the week of March 27: "Public Higher Education Week."

"It was very positive," she said. "We've got to start attacking now before the budget hits the State House."

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association will highlight the first day of "Public Higher Education Week," by opening its long-distance phone lines to students to call and lobby their state representatives against further cuts.

"Can the budget cuts" is the theme of a rally which will be held midweek on the steps of the Boston State House, and Orefice said she expects more than 2,000 students will help toss refundable cans onto the State House steps as a "symbolic gesture" to state leaders.

"We're showing the governor and state legislators that we have to turn in our 5-cent cans to pay for tuition and fees," she said. The cans will later be donated to the homeless, she said.

Orefice said she is contacting state representatives to meet with students after the rally to discuss concerns.

"We have to be much more vocal," she said. "We can't just sit back and watch them gut [education]. We have to react."

Preceding the week's events will be a letter writing campaign to state representatives from Feb. 21 to March 7, Orefice said. The campaign will focus on increasing funding for higher education, she said.

Orefice said she has continued early efforts to lobby state legislators by mailing 350 student schedules marked by oversubscriptions and cancelled courses to their individual state representative this week.
